One More Explosion Lasker Looks Old Our Unemployed Are Docile Meddling With Retailers

By Arthur Brisbane

Copyright, 1921.

Explosions in German chemical works killed at least a thousand, destroyed parts of Mannheim and Ludwigshafen yesterday. Railroad trains were buried under wreckage. The force of the explosion was felt fifty miles away.

That seems and is horrible. A little while ago in war, not far from that same Rhine, there were explosions every few minutes, killing hundreds and thousands; scarcely any attention was paid to them. Everybody had got used to it.

The energy of the Germans will clear away and rebuild swiftly, as you see the ants repairing disaster to their houses of sand.

Germany can stand many explosions, for in Germany the people are really WORKING, eleven and twelve hours a day, and employers say there are no complaints. The workers know that the choice is hard work for the years to come, or national death.

German factories that blew up yesterday were often and unsuccessfully bombed by airmen during the war. Some one man's carelessness did what all the courage of flying men could not do.

Working for the government is not a gay life when you really work. Lasker, on the Shipping Board, was visible yesterday, looking twenty years older than usual. Cleaning out the stables by Hercules was child's play compared to cleaning up the Shipping Board accumulation of dishonesty and incompetence.

Unless Lasker has lost the energy that he once possessed, some of those gentlemen will go to jail. The public is more interested in knowing that Lasker has a definite plan. He realizes, as does the President, that the possibility of war makes a commercial navy absolutely necessary, and he is determined that the country shall have it.

Yesterday afternoon in London, the unemployed with red flags flying, fifes tooting and drums beating, marched to the House of Parliament to demand assistance.

We handle them better than that in America. In New York city, when the unemployed gather, and to bear a few comforting word and eat a truck load of buns some philanthropist has provided, policemen dispersed them.

"Be hungry if you must, but don't bother me about it," is the motto of authority over here.

Business men complain that bankers, advising people not to buy, started a "buyers' strike" and injured business unnecessarily. Bankers would not like it if merchants started a campaign advising citizens to withdraw their money from banks and put it elsewhere, on the ground that this would compel the banks to offer extra inducements to depositors.

Merchants naturally object to bankers or others that disorganize business by meddling in retail trade which they do not understand. For all such disruptions the public must pay in the long run.

A man who has money should spend it reasonably, using his best judgment at the time of buying. Extreme saving foolishness would be just as bad for the general public as was the extreme reckless spending foolishness of two or three years ago.

Henry Ford raised wages and reduced charges on his railroad. Now he does the third thing—cuts down the wize of the clerical department. Since they say they can't possibly do the work, but they will and that Ford knows more about that than they do.

To pay a good price for a day's work, and then insist on getting a day's work is the right way. The worst waste in the world is the waste of men's time and intelligence. That waste has been getting worse every year in the United States, with idiotic leaders, unable to realize the harm they do their men and nobody else, when they encourage them in shirking.

Russia, Germany and Austria, all three, are given over to lunatic speculation and gambling. The Bolshevik government knows that, but business really amounts to something, that you must allow men to be selfishly interested in order to keep them working; and in Russia business has started with furious speculating enthusiasm.

The late news is, most surprising, that some sort of a "beer bill" may be passed, permitting the manufacture of feeble beer for the sake of a thousand millions in taxes yearly.

"Let the poor dance and drink wine that they may forget their misery," said the kind-hearted French bishop long ago.

"Let the poor drink light beer and pay a billion dollars in taxes on it, that we may escape the heavy tax on our incomes," say the level-headed, prosperous ones at today.

U.S. to Summon Ku Klux Leaders

DAUGHERTY MAY QUERY KLANSMEN

Orders Burns to Investigate Operations of Order in Various Sections

By Associated Press.

Washington, Sept. 22.—High officials of the Ku Klux Klan may be summoned to Washington for interrogation by the Department of Justice, Attorney-General Daugherty indicated today.

Director Burns of the Department's Bureau of Investigation, Mr. Daugherty announced, has been instructed to set his agents at work on an investigation of the Klan's organization in various parts of the country.

Resignations of Two Klan Heads Received

Atlanta, Sept. 22.—Colonel William J. Simmons, Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan, said today that the resignations of Edward Young Clarke and Mrs. Elizabeth Tyler, head of the Klan's woman's auxiliary, had been placed in his hands, but that he would take no action on them until he has made a thorough investigation.

Simmons denied that he had discharged A. Donald Bate, of Newark, N. J., as Kleagle of the order, but admitted receiving Bate's telegram demanding the dismissal of Clark and Mrs. Tyler.

Wright Shows Woman Was "Power Behind Throne"

Former Grand Goblin C. Anderson Wright, whose exposure of the Klan of the Invisible Empire has stirred the country, today revealed that Mrs. Elizabeth Tyler was the real power behind the throne in the Imperial Palace.

This will be my "Who's Who in the Ku Klux Klan."

I shall separate and list the heads of the secret order "that rides in the night" according to their ability and value and regardless of mystic rank.

Beginning at the beginning, two years ago William Joseph Simmons, a professor of history in Lanier University, Atlanta, Ga., saw the birth of a small organization known as the Ku Klux Klan, whose membership did not exceed 1,000. He resided for the most part in Atlanta.

The name, a relic of reconstruction days, had been appropriated by Simmons, who was evidently a student in the science of mysticism.

Then some one in his State organization ran off with the funds. Then was set up what became known as the Klandestine Klan in Tennessee as a rival to the Ku Klux Klan.

This nearly broke Simmons' heart. He was a sad grand wizard.

Edward Young Clarke, one of the partners in the Southern Publicity Association, who made a large sum of money during the war doing campaign publicity for the Salvation Army and the Red Cross, became interested in and joined the Atlanta Klan.

PROMISES BACKING.

The Imperial Wizard told his troubles to his Klansmen. Clarke heard them. Being an experienced publicity man, he conceived the value of the name of the Ku Klux Klan appealed to him. A few days later Clarke called on Simmons and said in substance:

"I see great possibilities in the Ku Klux Klan and will be glad to give

ARBUCKLE HEARING BEGINS

Film Comedian Goes Before Police Court for Decision on Murder Charge

By International News Service.

San Francisco, Sept. 22.—Whether or not Roscoe C. "Fatty" Arbuckle, rotund comedian of the movies, must face jury trial for murder was to be decided at the preliminary hearing on the charges against him in Police Court this afternoon.

The hearing was expected to give the first real inkling of the defence of Arbuckle against the charge of the State that he, by an attack, caused injuries which resulted in the death of beautiful Virginia Rappe.

Until today the defence has maintained an impenetrable silence, but with the cross-examination of the witnesses to be placed on the stand by the State in an effort to obtain commitment of Arbuckle to trial before the Superior Court for murder, the determined battle to free the former film star was to be under way.

The morning was spent in feverish preparation for the opening of the hearing. Frank Dominguez, chief counsel for the defence, arrived from Los Angeles and plunged into conference with his associates, Milton Cohen and Charles H. Brennan.

SENNACHER QUESTIONED.

On the same train came Al Sennacher, manager of the dead film actress, whose stories before a Los Angeles Grand Jury yesterday injected a new sensation into the case. Sennacher was taken before District Attorney Matthew Brady for further questioning as to his sworn statement that Arbuckle had admitted the commission of an act against Virginia Rappe which might have resulted in her injury.

Arbuckle's alleged admission was

WOMAN IS FATALLY SHOT

Pittsfield Officials Investigate Society Leader's Case After Husband and Doctor Talk

Pittsfield, Sept. 22.—City authorities today began an investigation into the events leading up to the mysterious and probably fatal shooting of Mrs. Edward B. Owen, society woman and wife of one of the richest men of Stockbridge, who is reported to be dying at the House of Mercy Hospital, with a bullet wound through her lungs.

Conflicting reports regarding the shooting are told by the surgeon attending Mrs. Owen and the woman's husband, Edward B. Owen.

Mr. Owen declares that the wound was accidentally inflicted when his wife picked up an old German revolver, which had been in the house for many years, to dust it. The weapon, which no one knew was loaded, exploded, says the husband, the bullet piercing her breast.

Dr. Herbert Stockwell, one of the best known of the fashionable physicians and surgeons of Stockbridge, today told the police that, in his opinion, the wound from which his patient is suffering was inflicted with suicidal intent.

Mrs. Owen was taken to the hospital last Sunday, with the bullet lodged close to her heart, and her lungs pierced.

No hint was allowed to leak out regarding the nature of the accident, nor have the hospital authorities as yet seen fit to make public details regarding the condition of their patient, further than to say she was believed to be dying.

It was not until the death of Mrs. Owen appeared to be a matter of a few hours at the best that the police were notified.

HUSBAND AT BEDSIDE.

Mr. Owen has been devoted in his attentions to his wife since the shooting, remaining most of his time either at her bedside or in the hospital. He is returning home at night.

He is indignant at the report that Mrs. Owen attempted to shoot herself. He declares that there was no reason why she should have attempted to take her own life.

Mrs. Owen was Miss Marion Simmons, daughter of the late George W. Simmons, wealthy Boston merchant, and she and Mr. Owen were married in Stockbridge on November 10, 1904. At the time of the wedding she was twenty-seven years old and he was fifty.

TWO CHILDREN.

She had known her husband ever since, as a child, her mother had taken her to the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge and Mr. Owen had called there. It was a joke between them that at their first meeting he had lifted her into her high chair at the dining table of the Inn.

Owen is the grandson of the late Charles A. Owen, paper manufacturer of Stockbridge and Lynn, and inherited a fortune of approximately half a million dollars when his grandfather died.

Under the terms of the paper manufacturer's will, Owen's share of the estate was to go to missions, foreign and domestic, should he die without children.

For several years it appeared as though the missions would get the money, for Owen was known as a confirmed bachelor, devoted to business and sport.

His eldest son was born three years after the marriage and was christened Philip. The second son was Tudor, and was two years younger than his elder brother.

MASHAPAUG LAKE GIVES UP GIRL VICTIM

Mrs. Kettelle Disappeared Last Week From Honeymoon Camp at Union, Ct.

Union, Ct., Sept. 22.—The body of Mrs. Norah Johnson Kettelle, who disappeared from her honeymoon camp here nine days ago, was found today in Lake Mashapaug.

The discovery was attended by a good deal of dramatic interest, as many had predicted the body would be recovered on the ninth day following her disappearance.

Mrs. Kettelle, Radcliffe College graduate, was the bride of John Dunster Kettelle of Cambridge, Mass.

They were married in New York just four days before her disappearance from their cottage on the shores of Lake Mashapaug.

Kettelle has from the first been a believer in the theory that his young wife was accidentally drowned while bathing or rowing.

Some village authorities, however, had held that she had either wandered away while in a weakened mental condition or deliberately fled from her camp. They based this belief chiefly on an alleged flight of the girl from her own family before her marriage, which was denied by her relatives.

Nine days ago, shortly after noon Kettelle left his bride to go some distance for a supply of ice. When he returned she was gone. So were her bathing suit, some other clothing and their rowboat.

The boat was found later across the lake, the oars neatly shipped. Kettelle's theory then, and it is now, was that she wanted to read on the shore, and in trying to seize the boat when it started to drift away from the beach stepped into deep water and was drowned.

Mr. Kettelle, husband of the young woman, who left for his home in Cambridge after an extended search for the body, was notified and understood to be on the way here.

DUANE WARNS STATE LEGION TO KEEP OUT OF POLITICS

By CHARLES O. POWER.

North Adams, Sept. 22.—State Commander James T. Duane's address today at the opening session of the State convention of the Massachusetts American Legion was the chief feature of the proceedings.

It made a big hit with the delegates and was applauded heartily and often. He struck out in a two-fisted way. Lambasting people of high degree and denouncing neglect and bungling of disabled soldiers by national lawmakers and officials.

If cheering is any criterion, he has influenced the Legion to continue as "a brotherhood and not become the tailpiece of political kites." Many of the young patriots who would have the Legion exercise police powers whenever it felt the urge and use its power in political scales whenever some members felt offended admitted that the commander's words had a sobering effect upon them.

Outlining what he believes should be the Legion's attitude on politics, Commander Duane spoke, in part, as follows:

"As our constitution suggests, we are an organization of 'policies rather than politics.' It behooves us to refrain from using the American Legion in any sense, either directly or indirectly, for politico-party purposes. We must not use our membership in the American Legion to further the personal interests of any individual or group in politics.

"During the past year there were several instances in which members of our organization stepped over the bounds in this respect, but after investigation, it was learned that the error was made through misinterpretation of the constitution."

"Much debate has been caused on the question of the Legion's entrance into politics. I feel that it has not been necessary for our organization to enter into politics. I feel that it is not necessary that we do this to gain our just ends. If we would merely keep before our mind that, regardless of our usual political beliefs, when it comes to the question of veteran-benefit, we must just

CANOPIC CREW ON STRIKE FOR THREE DAYS

With 265 saloon and 189 steerage passengers aboard, the White Star liner Canopic arrived at Commonwealth Pier today from Genoa, Naples and the Azores, bringing details of a three-day strike of members of the crew aboard the ship at Genoa.

The Canopic left many thousands of would-be emigrants at each of its ports of call, because under the restrictive terms of the immigration act, the number of immigrants allowed to enter the country has been greatly reduced.

The Canopic can accommodate 300 second class passengers and 1,700 steerage, but was not permitted to take that many aboard. This led to trouble in the crew at Genoa. Many

PICKETING WAR MEASURE, SAYS COURT

By Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 22.—Peaceful picketing was condemned by Supreme Court Justice Strong in Brooklyn today in granting an injunction restraining the fancy leather goods workers' union from picketing the factory of the A. L. Read Company in Richmond Mill and from "all other acts of intimidation or violence."

"The plaintiff contends that the defendants are interfering with it and its employes," said Justice Strong. "It desires to be let alone. Picketing and scoring of sentinals are done as war measures. Our laws and institutions will not permit of the waging of private war in such a manner."

The decision commented on the fact that many of the defendants were foreigners.

Mrs. Kettelle, say friends to whom the grief-stricken husband talked after her disappearance, rebelled against marriage. Love, it is said, she failed ever to understand completely, and it was this fact, it is believed, that caused her to flee four days after her wedding.

The Rev. Henry A. Coolidge, pastor of the Union Congregational Church, who was made a confidant by the bereaved bridegroom after the tragedy of last Tuesday, discussed the case reservedly with a reporter for the Boston American.

"I want to say, first, that Kettelle has throughout shown himself all that a Christian gentleman and a true lover ought to be," he began. "No man ever showed a finer spirit towards his bride than this young man did."

"Mrs. Kettelle, I believe, was of a flighty, nervous temperament. At times she would feel for Kettelle a deep, powerful love and at other times she would feel indifferent, cold, towards him. This was not due in any way to any outside influences in her life nor to any action of his. It was simply an unfortunate psychological condition, one that could in time have been remedied.

FAILED TO UNDERSTAND LOVE.

"She failed to understand or comprehend love in all its entirety. This condition existed during their courtship while Kettelle was in the service. It continued, I believe, through into their married life. She seems to have been frightened at married life, to have rebelled against it."

"They have told me that Kettelle aroused some unfavorable comment here by his apparent lack of grief over his bride's disappearance," said the minister. "He was not a man who believed in mourning publicly. He thought a public display of grief was selfish, but no man ever felt his loss more deeply, or mourned more sincerely than Kettelle did."

Through all of the pitiful story, as told by the kindly, white-haired minister, who also is physician for his country parishioners, two figures stand out pathetically.

One is the young bride, frightened and depressed by a love that she could not understand, oppressed as she found that marriage terrified her. The other, the husband, Kettelle, hurt and worried over his wife's failure to comprehend the true meaning of love, but through it all, loyal, tender and considerate.

Home Brewing Safe, Official U. S. Ruling

Washington, Sept. 22.—Home brewing is safe.

Sellers of home brew ingredients also are secure from interference. There will be no effort by prohibition authorities to stop the manufacture or sale of malt extracts or other compounds, sought by home beer makers. This authoritative statement of policy came from government officials.

While officials have held that home brewing is technically illegal under the Volstead act, and that likewise the sale of materials intended for such use also is unlawful, by strict construction of the statute no program is contemplated for a change in the policy which has governed since the dry era began.

WOOED BY MAN WITH WIFE, SAYS WIDOW

Roxbury Woman Asks Suitor Who Has Four Children to Pay $50,000

Charging that he deceived her for years with assurances of marriage, and all the while had a wife and four children living only a few blocks away, Mrs. Sarah A. Crahan, or No. 42½ Warren street, Roxbury, has brought a $50,000 breach of promise suit against Joseph Magnet, proprietor of the Roxbury Service Garage Company.

She has brought further suit to recover $2,010 from the garage service company.

This represents money she loaned Magnet, she says, believing that they were to be business partners as well as man and wife. The concern is located at No. 14 Longwood avenue.

"He introduced me as his wife to our acquaintances," said Mrs. Crahan in her first statement concerning the suits.

"I didn't want him to do it, but he insisted, and said we would be married soon anyway. Now that he has failed to keep his promise, I feel that I am disgraced and humiliated in the eyes of my friends."

Mrs. Crahan is the widow of George T. Crahan, former chief custodian at Charlestown Navy Yard, who died in 1916. She has two children, Joseph, nine years old, and Edith, seven.

"I went to work for Joe Magnet five years ago," said Mrs. Crahan. "He was dealing in horses on Shawmut avenue. He advertised for a bookkeeper, and, as my husband was ill, I took the job.

"Some time later he went into bankruptcy. My husband and I lent him the money to start in the automobile business. Two years before my husband's death he came to live with us, and remained in my home until last March.

"My husband died in 1918. Magnet continued to live at my house. He gave everybody to understand that he had been married but was divorced, and all the while his wife and four children lived at No. 14 Hollander street, Roxbury.

"I gave him all the money I had, my husband's insurance money and my own savings, so he could carry on his automobile business. I taught him to read and write. Two months after the death of my husband, he proposed marriage to me. I told him it was too soon to marry. While he lived here, he gave me an engagement ring, a wedding ring and a watch. He took me everywhere and introduced me as his wife.

"Some time afterward he hired a young woman bookkeeper named Margaret O'Rourke, and took her into the corporation. The first I knew of it was when she told me in August of this year that I couldn't draw any more money. I had been drawing $25 a week for my services.

"Some weeks ago I reminded him of his promise to marry be. He told me he was already married. Until then I had supposed him divorced. His own sister, who went with us to New Hampshire last year, told me that he was. It was a stunning surprise and disappointment.

"After I filed my suit, he sent for me and asked me to wait until he could get a divorce and marry me, but I told him to see my lawyer."

of the crew were discharged at Genoa, because their services were not needed, but the Stewards' Union called a general strike.

For three days the agents of the line and representatives of the union conferred and passengers whiled away the hours before the strike was settled by compromise. Some of the discharged stewards were taken back. There were demonstrations of displeasure by striking seamen, and a red flag was found tied to the ship rail.

Many educators, doctors, artists and students returned on the Canopic. Professor A. Kingsley Porter and wife arrived with two maids and a manservant. Professor Porter had been a year and a half making archeological researches in France and Italy. He was formerly of Yale and will this year be connected with Harvard.

Other educators to arrive were Professor W. L. Bevan of Columbia University, Professor G. C. Wood of Dartmouth and Professor Rodrick MacEachen of the Catholic University of Washington.

Several physicians who had been attending clinics in Europe also were aboard. They included Dr. Gualtiero Amesagga, formerly of the Cushing Hospital staff. Henry Hunt Clark of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts was aboard. Mrs. Esther Jacobs, wife of Agide Jacchia, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Pops, was also an arrival.

The pianist, Ethel Leginska, came with Esther Tagbrone, a sixteen-year-old New York girl, who has made a hit with her music abroad. Countess Claire Di Castrobia of Baltimore was aboard, and so were Arthur Piedler of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Right Rev. John J. Lawlor, Catholic bishop of South Dakota, who had returned from a visit to Pope Benedict at Rome. Bishop Lawlor reported Pope Benedict in good health and happy.

DEATH LIST IN EXPLOSION GROWS

More Than 1500 Believed Killed, 850 More Bodies Are Taken From Ruins

Mayence, Sept. 22 (by the Associated Press).—While estimates of the number of dead from yesterday's explosion, which destroyed the Badische Company's great chemical plant at Oppau, continued today at approximately 2,500, the total of persons actually found to have been injured exceeded the first figures by a wide margin.

Already 2,500 persons have received treatment for wounds sustained through the effects of the explosion.

Bodies of the dead to the number of 850 had been recovered this forenoon.

French and German authorities in the district were continuing the rescue work today in the closest collaboration. A German hospital train has arrived at Frankfort and a French train at Treves with injured from the scene of the disaster.

French troops and volunteer workers toiled through the night in the ruins.

Oppau was virtually swept away and the explosion hurled desolation over a wide district on the west bank of the Rhine between Mannheim and Frankenthal.

The scene of the explosion was more than three miles from Mannheim, but every window of that city was shattered by the concussion. The shock was felt in towns fifty miles away.

People.

An investigation of the explosion has been ordered by the authorities but those who have visited the ruins declare there is little upon which a finding can be based. The building of the Badische company have disappeared, and only a great hole in the ground marks the site of the main structure.

It is a theory of those familiar with the plant that at least two gasometers exploded, and that nitrogen compounds stored in the buildings, in process of manufacture, were detonated.

LYNN WOMAN, 66, IS DYING OF BURNS

Mrs. Shaw was removed to Lynn Hospital. There is little hope of her recovery.

YOUTH SOLD AT "AUCTION" RETURNED TO INDIGNANT FATHER

BIG FAMILY TO GREET 'ORPHAN'

A perfectly good father and mother to say nothing of eight brothers and an indefinite number of sisters today welcomed home sixteen-year-old "William Dave," one of the first "shorn lambs of labor" sold as a "lonely orphan" at auction on Boston Common by Urbain Ledoux.

The home where the glad reunion took place between the "lonely orphan" and his numerous family is at No. 183 Virginia street, Woonsocket, R. I., and the boy's real name is not William Dave but Vangele Bikis.

His father, Vasilios Bikis, arrived in Boston yesterday with fire in his eye and rage in his heart against Ledoux, and a strong desire to administer a severe spanking to "William Dave."

GIVEN NEW SUIT.

Through the Boston American the father was able to get in touch with his son very shortly. The boy had been "bought" by Mme. James J. Graninger, who took the young man to her home, promising to give him board and lodging until such time as he could find work.

When this failed, Mme. Graninger, who is proprietor of a hair dressing establishment, took the boy in there to teach him to become a male dresser of women's hair.

Incidentally, she bought him a new suit, shirts and shoes as well as other things and provided him with a good room and three most excellent meals a day. Mme. Graninger is of Swiss stock and knows good food.

"Imagine," she exclaimed, in telling of her disappointment, "I am in my place of business, when in comes this man whom I have never seen before. He produces a bank book and documents of many kinds and then demands his son.

ACKNOWLEDGES FATHER.

"Of course I have no idea of what he is speaking, and when I learn that he has come for my William Dave I am described — speechless. This William Dave is so clever with his fingers, and has such good taste in the fashioning of his coiffures. Helas!!

"Mais—what you say—but what would you? The life is so filled with disappointments. I tell him, this William Dave, 'is this your papa?' and he say right away it is.

"So then I say, 'Right is right, William Dave, and you have done so very, very wrong to run away from home from your so good father and mother and brothers and sisters and to tell me that you are an orphan.

"You must go back to your home in Woonsocket to your good father and mother and brothers and sisters and stay there until you grow up.

RAN AWAY, SAYS FATHER.

"If some one wish to resume the hair-dressing profession, you come to me and I shall teach you for nothing.'

"Ah! that boy," went on Madam; "he was so clever as a hair dresser—Helas!"

The story told by Bikis was just about the same.

"He's my son—this William Dave. Up to four months ago he lived at home with me and his mamma and his brothers and his sisters. Then one day he ran away. I followed him and found him making $12 a week. But he ran away again. Then I followed him to Boston and he went to New York. I went to New York and he came back to Boston.

"Here in Boston I found a rabbi do not like that man Ledoux. I do not like that my son should be sold at auction.

PARENT OWNS PROPERTY.

"I have houses in Woonsocket. I own two garages there and a store. I have plenty of property and I do not like that my son shall be sold as a slave. I want him back—I shall pull his ear—good—the scamp."

When he had finished Mme. Graninger turned the weeping boy over to the nearby weeping man and the two disappeared from the hair dressing establishment.

Whereupon she wept a little also.

Active Spook May Be an Agent of the "Wets"

Pawtucket, R. I., Sept. 22.—The "ghost" of Blackstone River continues to walk.

For weeks some city folk have been moved alternately to mirth, bewilderment and fear by stories of the white-robed figure coming from the mists that shroud the river's edge and marching through "Lovers' Lane."

A few nights ago able-bodied men "sat up" on the shore awaiting the coming of the "ghost."

Over the dark waters, came a white-shrouded form. Most of the men fled, but one swam out and discovered the "apparition" to be an improvised raft, fitted up with a crossbar draped in white.

Two young men confessed it was a hoax, but declared they were not responsible for the "real ghost."

The "ghost," as if angered, began to walk again.

MAN LOCKED UP AS 'POISON PEN' WRITER

"Detective" Johnson Sent to Bridgewater Asylum by Judge Flynn

Edward P. Johnson, alleged author of "poison pen" letters to hundreds of prominent men, has been sent to the State Asylum for Insane Criminals at Bridgewater for observation by order of Judge Flynn of East Cambridge Superior Court.

The order of the judge came after he had heard the testimony of Dr. Edward U. Utley, East Cambridge jail physician, who said Johnson is suffering from exalted ideas and the delusion he is a great detective. The physician said he considered Johnson dangerous. Johnson was before the court charged with acting as a private detective in Arlington without having a license to operate.

Johnson, who called himself "chief detective" of the Strong Secret service, with headquarters in Cabot street, Beverly, was first arrested in May, 1920, by State Detective Silas B. Smith of Connection with "poison pen" letters and telegrams which had been sent to hundreds. These missives are alleged to have libelled many prominent lawyers and physicians.

The letters were in the form of alleged police reports and were headed: "Strong Secret Service, Boston." Among those attacked in the missives were Chief of Police William A. Hill of Everett; Dr. Joseph D. Chisholm and John A. Bruce of Everett; William H. Walsh, Everett druggist; Jesse M. Gove, a Boston attorney, and Frederick G. Phillips and Herbert F. Phillips of Gloucester.

The arrest of Johnson followed complaints of more than fifty persons to District Attorney Nathan A. Tufts. The letters they complained of were multigraphed on letter paper headed "The Strong Secret Service." In these letters Johnson was referred to as the "chief detective" and was declared to be a member of the New York city detective department.

When Johnson was arrested a New York police badge was found in one of his pockets. The police say Johnson visited New York police headquarters and, after putting on a uniform, fitted the badge on each day try to identify arrested persons. Johnson's imposition was not discovered until after the test was concluded.

LEDOUX TO OPEN JOBLESS CHURCH IN NEW YORK

Leases 5-Story Building and Will Ask Bishop Manning to Aid Unemployed

By Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 22.—Urbain Ledoux—the "Mr. Zero of the auction block"—today extended his plans for helping the jobless by starting negotiations for the lease of a five-story building on Front street capable of housing and feeding 1,000 men.

In addition he hopes to have the churches throw open their halls to the unemployed, and is planning to call on Bishop Manning of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York.

With this purpose in mind he began bright and early to recruit an army of human exhibits to show the churchman that his proteges were worthy of aid.

Appearing in Cooper square at 7 a. m., he distributed Elevated tickets to nearly 200 former service men, war workers and general laborers now out of jobs. He explained that he would take these men with him to the grounds of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, where he planned to prove to Bishop Manning that the 200 were not bums and loafers, but zealous workers.

Rev. Clifton Macon, rector of All Souls' Church, today came to a newspaper a check for the amount which he had planned to pay for tickets for the coming Workers' Bliss, and asked that the money be used to feed hungry men and women.

He said he had been a baseball fan for years, but his conscience would not permit him to use the money to buy tickets for the series when the unemployed were unable to get enough to eat.

He intends later to give for the aid of the unemployed the money he had planned to spend on a shooting trip next month. He suggested that a World's Series between teams finishing second be held for the aid of the unemployed.

TROTZKY SAYS POLES ARE BACKING BANDITS

Moscow, Sept. 20. (By the Associated Press)—Leon Trotzky, the Soviet war minister, who has returned here from the Ukraine, addressing a meeting of the Moscow Soviet today, said an ultimatum had been received from Poland in which the Poles demanded fulfillment of the peace terms. He declared Russia could also make demands for fulfillment of the treaty, as Polish generals were supporting banditry in the Ukraine and Poland itself in many ways was violating the provisions of the treaty. Trotzky asserted that in the Ukraine it was generally understood that the bandits were "tools of Polish and French schemers."

The Pocohontas was unable to continue the voyage to New York and was forced to tie up at Gibraltar, where her passengers were transferred to other vessels, the travelers say. Several days will be necessary to repair the steamer.

"FATTY" ARBUCKLE AT THREE AGES OF HIS LIFE

And then the husky youth. Here is how "Fatty" looked when he was the "life of the party" at Hollywood, in the movie actors' colony, where he lived in a $100,000 home, drove a $25,000 car and paid a huge income tax.

And this is how Arbuckle looks today as he awaits trial for the death of Virginia Rappe. The corners of his mouth are down now instead of up, and "Fatty" doesn't look as though he would dance now for an ocean of champagne.

TELLS LEGION TO KEEP OUT OF POLITICS

'stick together', our objectives would be reached.

"From time to time there has arisen the question of expressing gratitude to public officials who exert themselves to recognize the message of beneficial veteran legislation.

POLICIES, NOT POLITICS.

"It is my opinion that this question comes under policies rather than politics and it would indeed be unGrateful if we failed, as an organization, to extend our heartfelt gratitude to the officials and statesmen who labored so hard in bringing blessings to the veterans as has the author and supporters of the famous Sweet bill and authors and supporters of other beneficial veteran legislation.

"The American Legion is composed of many men of many minds on political question—of Republicans, of Democrats, of Socialists and of those who are not affiliated with any party of men who are leaders in political activities and of those who are humble in party affairs.

"It would be impossible to amalgamate our membership into a political unit. In my opinion, it would be a grievous mistake to attempt it. We should be a brotherhood of veterans, and not a shifting political party.

RIGHTS FOR ALL.

"The rights which the constitution guarantees must be for all, not for a few, nor for a class or classes. They belong to no one political party or organization. They are for all. Upon them rests ordered government, the hope of mankind for peace and happiness. Government can decide violations of the constitution and deal with the violators. And it is our duty to support the government not to anticipate its action.

"As citizens we may be politicians and in politics to our hearts content. As Legionaires we are brothers, nor politicians. The American Legion! God grant that it may always be the American Legion and not the tail pieces of political kites."

Colonel Foley of Worcester is definite in his opposition to the proposed amendment. Colonel W. H. Root of Haverhill who has said he would not be a candidate under any circumstances is now flirting with the proposition.

General Edwards received an ovation when Commander Doane presented him, and Mrs. Edwards was greeted with a warm outburst of cheering.

Marshal Foch Invited to Visit Massachusetts

Marshal Foch, who as commander-in-chief of the allied armies in the world war directed the destiny of what probably the largest military force in history, has been invited to come to Massachusetts during his tour of America.

The fact was announced today by Governor Cox in a letter of greeting to the Massachusetts convention of the American Legion at North Adams. He urged the legionnaires to adopt a resolution supplementing his invitation to the great military leader.

In his greeting, Governor Cox said he hopes that the efforts of the Legion to secure fair treatment for all veterans, notably the disabled, will be crowned with success.

Because of the pressure of business, Governor Cox was unable to go to North Adams. He concluded his letter of greeting to the Legion with this statement:

"Massachusetts rejoices that the American Legion is now an established institution capable of virile and unselfish leadership devoted solely to the public weal. May success attend your endeavor to obtain justice for all veterans, your determination to secure fair treatment for the disabled and your fundamental purpose to battle for God and country."

FATTY'S HEARING IS BEGUN IN POLICE COURT

made, according to Semmacher, in the presence of Fred Fischbach, Lowell Sherman and Harry McCullough. Fischbach has already been questioned about it and made, according to the district attorney, an evasive reply.

To newspaper men, however, Fischbach passed the lie to Semnacher's statement, denying that Arbuckle had ever discussed in his presence what took place in the hotel room.

Lowell Sherman, apparently, was beyond questioning.

No word has been received from Sherman by District Attorney Brady since his disappearance on a train bound for New York city. A report was current here that Sherman was en route for Europe when he left Los Angeles for the East.

District Attorney Brady, however, was of the opinion that Sherman will return as a witness. Should he fail to do so voluntarily, it was intimated an indictment will bring about his extradition.

Harry McCullough, Arbuckle's chauffeur, was to be questioned regarding his knowledge of the alleged Arbuckle admission.

District Attorney Brady planned a brisk presentation of his case against Arbuckle. He anticipated that one full day would enable him to lay his case before Police Court Judge Sylvian Lazarus. As an evidence that he expected the defence to make strenuous efforts to free Arbuckle at his hearing was shown by his estimate that the "defence might take two days."

MYSTERY GIRL SOUGHT.

Defence attorneys made no estimate.

Judge Lazarus, before whom the case was heard, had three courses open to him after hearing the evidence:

1—Hold the prisoner for trial for murder.

2—Hold him for trial on any degree of murder, including manslaughter.

3—Dismiss all charges against Arbuckle. This would not affect the manslaughter charge pending.

For the first time today anxiety was expressed by the district attorney's office because of the failure of Dr. Arthur Beardsley to put in an appearance, one of the first physicians to attend Miss Rappe.

He left on a hunting trip before her death and was found last Saturday in a wild mountain country. He agreed to return and should have arrived Tuesday. A detective was assigned today to search for him.

At the same time careful inquiry was being made into the identity of the mysterious "Edna Grant." Two letters have been received from Miss Grant promising an important story in the Arbuckle case.

The latest, received last night, said she would appear Monday and bring with her another nurse who could corroborate her story. In the letter she said she had been threatened with death after writing her first letter.

Although District Attorney Brady would not make public his first witness to be examined this afternoon, it was understood Dr. Shelby Strange, official autopsy surgeon, would be heard first. Other witnesses summoned for the initial hearing were:

Dr. William Ophuls, who performed an unofficial autopsy; Mrs. Bambina Maude Delmont, prosecuting witness; Miss Alice Blake, show girl, who attended the party; Miss Zey Prevost, former bathing girl of the movies and participant in the party, and Miss Grace Halston, nurse, who attended Miss Rappe at Wakefield Sanitarium.

Says "Fatty" Alone Had Key to His Cellar

By Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Sept. 22.—Only Roscoe C. ("Fatty") Arbuckle himself had the key to the cellar of his residence here, according to Miss Katherine Fitzgerald, housekeeper for Arbuckle, in testimony given to Ralph Camarillo, assistant district attorney.

Miss Fitzgerald said, according to Camarillo, that she understood Arbuckle's cellar was "generously stocked" with liquors, that he alone entered it; that she did not know whether he had taken any with him when he started for San Francisco on the trip which resulted in his arrest for the alleged murder of Miss Virginia Rappe.

She said that while she arranged for the payment of other household expenses, she never had seen a bill for liquor among them.

Camarillo stated Miss Fitzgerald's statements checked with evidence already in the possession of Federal officials who were investigating the source of the liquor drunk at the Arbuckle party in San Francisco.

Orders All Films of Virginia Rappe Withdrawn

By Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 22.—All First National Film Exchanges were ordered today to withdraw all films from exhibition in which appeared Virginia Rappe, the actress for whose death Roscoe C. ("Fatty") Arbuckle is held at San Francisco on a charge of murder, it was announced here today.

Thirty-two hundred exhibitors are represented in the action.

By International News Service.

New York, Sept. 22.—Lowell Sherman, movie actor, who is desired as a witness by the prosecutor at San Francisco, in the "Fatty" Arbuckle case, was found by detectives today in the apartment leased by him here and served a request-subpoena, which will require Sherman to submit to questioning by Edward Swann, New York district attorney.

'BEST LOOKING GIRL' IS SUED FOR DIVORCE

Newark, N. J, Sept. 22.—Not only is she married, but Mrs. W. B. Heyer, formerly Miss Margaret Bates, who recently won a contest as the most beautiful girl in Newark and represented the city Sept. 7 and 8 as Miss Newark in the Atlantic City Pageant, also is defendant in a divorce suit brought by her husband, William B. Heyer, also of Newark. They were married January 21, 1918, at the House of Prayer in Newark.

Papers in the divorce action were served on her three days after she was elected Newark's best looking girl. She said nothing about it at the time, but prepared for the pageant. She received $250 to pay her expenses at one of the beach front hotels.

Mrs. Heyer will not contest the divorce suit. Heyer charges desertion took place immediately after the marriage. He said Mrs. Heyer went to her parents' home and that he went to his home "with the understanding that they were to meet the following day and arrange for their future." Heyer said his wife failed to keep the appointment and that numerous endeavors since then to have his wife live with him have proved futile.

STILLMAN 'KEY HOLE' WITNESS LOSES LIFE

Sheriff Grenon Killed by Blade of Airplane Propeller at Quebec

Montreal, Sept. 22.—Word was received here today that Harry Grenon, one of the witnesses in the James A. Stillman divorce hearing, was killed in Quebec when the propeller of an airplane in which he had been a passenger struck him on the side of the head.

His skull was fractured and he died in a few minutes.

Grenon's "keyhole" testimony in the Stillman case furnished one of the many sensations.

From a report of the fatal accident given by eye-witnesses, it appears that Grenon, in his capacity as sheriff of La Tuque, had gone to Quebec on official business and while there decided to take an airplane flight.

LEAP PROVES FATAL.

As the plane volplaned toward the field for its landing, Grenon unstrapped himself from the pit and jumped from the machine, while it taxied along the ground.

The momentum of his jump carried him beside the plane and he lurched against the propeller.

Two days before his death Grenon, in conversation with three or four friends, according to their assertions, made the statement that his testimony at the Stillman hearing was false.

He further said that he had been paid $500 and his expenses to tell the "keyhole" story, which he "would have given for nothing to get back at Beauvais."

It is common knowledge throughout the hunting regions of the Province that Beauvais and Grenon were on bad terms, and that Grenon opened up threatened Beauvais on more than one occasion.

APPOINTED SHERIFF.

Grenon, a French Canadian, was employed under Beauvais at the Stillman hunting lodges as a carpenter. After he acquired a knowledge of the divorce case, he was appointed sheriff of La Tuque, Quebec.

Beauvais' lawyers have affidavits made by those who heard Grenon's references to "Stillman money," and "evidence bought and paid for."

SHORTAGE OF PASTORS ACUTE, SAYS COMMITTEE

Pittsburgh, Sept. 22.—The present shortage of ministers is "acute, critical and grave," and the problem must be solved at once if the church is to go forward in its proper guiding hands, according to the report of the committee on home missions of the Congregational Church, which was presented by Rev. John Hall of Edinburgh, Scotland, at today's session of the National Council and Alliance of Reformed Churches throughout the world holding the Presbyterian system.

HARDING AND WILLIS AGREE ON PATRONAGE

Washington, Sept. 22.—The difficulties between President Harding and Senator Frank B. Willis, his successor in the Senate, over patronage in Ohio were amicably adjusted today at a lengthy conference between the two at the White House. As a result of the agreement, Senator Willis will withdraw his opposition to the nomination of Charles H. Nash of Toledo to be internal revenue collector there, and Nauts will be confirmed.

SINN FEIN SEES HOPE IN DELAY BY PREMIER

Irish Leaders Refuse to Be as Pessimistic as British Correspondents

By DANIEL O'CONNELL,
By International News Service.

Dublin, Sept. 22.—Republican Ireland refused to take seriously the pessimism expressed by British correspondents at Gairloch, Scotland, near Premier Lloyd George's rest cure retreat, over progress being made toward an Irish settlement.

On the contrary, Sinn Fein circles in Dublin today were inclined to regard as a hopeful sign the fact that Lloyd George had postponed for one week his intended reply to De Valera's last note, in which De Valera asked the Premier to explain just where negotiations stood.

Astute Irish politicians believe it quite possible that during the week's delay confidential sallies of the Premier's suite will sound out De Valera upon certain points.

If these are found, then Lloyd George, it is believed, will invite the Irish delegates to confer with him.

Advisers of Premier Lloyd George, who have been in Dublin for the past few days, have impressed upon their chief that De Valera is absolutely resolute in his stand against entering a conference bound by preliminary conditions.

Sinn Feiners are most hopeful today that a conference will be held.

WOMAN LOSES POWER IN KU KLUX KLAN

Woman, Imperial Dictator, Permitted No Appeals From Her Decisions

you financial backing to unlimited extent."

Clarke has told me Simmons was so overjoyed he broke down and cried. Clarke continued:

"I will give you this backing on condition that you get rid of your imperial staff and permit me to name a new staff."

Simmons readily agreed to this. The change was made immediately.

He put Simmons on a salary of $100 a week and put him at writing more mystic literature. Simmons continued as the figurehead Imperial Wizard.

Up to date Clarke's publicity bureau has taken $2,100,000 from new Klansmen. The membership has grown to 700,000, practically all within the last year.

I went over to Mrs. Elizabeth Tyler to ask her to arrange an appointment for me with Clarke at his estate. I had met Mrs. Tyler many times before, but had supposed her a kind of assistant to Clarke. She was a highly intelligent business woman, no one could gainsay that.

She is a blonde, of enormous size, weighing somewhere between 180 and 200 pounds, but understands the art of dressing and always makes a pleasing appearance.

Her manner is cold, blunt, to the point. I stated my desires. She replied:

"Major, you can take up any matter of business of the Klan with me." I protested, saying that would be impossible, that such matters could only be discussed between Klanmen.

To this she smilingly replied:

"Major, I am the Ku Klux Klan."

"What?" I gasped.

"I said I am the Ku Klux Klan."

"What do you mean?" I asked.

She explained:

"I suppose you have noticed that Colonel Simmons is a heavy drinker and out of the city most of the time. He and when in the city unable to attend to his official duties. And you have noticed, I suppose, that Mr. Clarke is imaginative, visionary and not a practical business man.

"The burden of this publicity bureau has always rested on my shoulders. The business of the Ku Klux Klan is, of course, the business of the Imperial Wizard, Simmons. Therefore it is my business, and I the Ku Klux Klan."

I asked Mrs. Tyler if she was serious, and realized what she was saying, and told her that I did not intend to deal with her; that I had always transacted my business with Professor Simmons and Mr. Clarke and would continue to do so. To this she replied:

"That, of course, is your affair."

I was not long in discovering that Mrs. Tyler was quite accurate in her statement of the situation: That she was the Imperial Dictator of the organization, and that there was no appeal from her decisions.

In all conferences thereafter in which Clarke, Simmons and I participated, she took part and was the dominating figure. Mrs. Tyler never treated me with any of her confidences.

She mistreated Anybody from the North, and this is the reason why, of the thousands of high officials of the Klan, only two are from the North. I was one of them, and only because I seemed to promise enormous profits in delivering the airmen of the country into their scheming hands.

August Was Record Month for Births in Providence

Providence, Sept. 23. — According to figures compiled by City Registrar Dr. Charles V. Chapin, 619 babies were born in this city during the month of August. This is the largest number of births ever recorded in a single month in the history of the city.

During the month of July 551 births were recorded, the largest number for any July, with one exception, 1917, when 573 babies were born.

Dr. Chapin says he is particularly pleased with the results of the law, which became effective July 1, requiring physicians to report births within forty-eight hours of their occurrence. In past years the reports of the physicians and midwives had to be supplemented by a house to house canvas conducted by the Health Department.

Equal Rights League Sends Thanks to Tague

The Boston branch of the National Equal Rights League today sent a letter of thanks to Congressman Tague at Washington for his introduction into the House of Representatives of a resolution to investigate the Ku Klux Klan as to its violation of the federal constitution. This was signed by E. T. Morris, president, and A. G. Wolff, secretary.

The national organization, through Rev. M. A. N. Shaw, president, and William Monroe Trotter, secretary, sent requests from its headquarters at No. 34 Cornhill to Congressmen Gallivan, Tinkham and Dallinger to introduce a bill making illegal private organizations which seek to stir up hatred or strife between racial or religious groups.

Atlanta K. of C. Protest Wave of Intolerance

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 22.—The Atlanta Council of the Knights of Columbus has adopted resolutions calling on the Chamber of Commerce and other civic organizations to "exert their energies and to use their influence to loosen and eliminate the wave of religious intolerance that is overwhelming our community, and to restore good will and peace among our people."

The resolutions declared that "repeated attacks have recently been made on the Catholic Church and various organizations, in the public press and by politicians and others," which, they said, culminated in the recent request by the City Council that certain newspapers exposing alleged un-American institutions include the Knights of Columbus in their investigations.

Missouri Governor Condemns Ku Klux

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 23.—Governor Arthur M. Hyde condemned the Ku Klux Klan as an organization before 500 members of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, A. F. and A. M., declaring it "a secret, furtive organization whose methods are subversive to American ideals and the rule of the law."

Governor Hyde declared that Masons have "no connection with the organization and want nothing to do with it."

"Discard Wilson and you and I will control the United States!" This, according to the autobiography of William F. McCombs, is what Col. E. M. House said to him. SHOTS FIRED IN 'DRY' RAID AT MILLIS

Three Chelsea Men Arrested and Mash Is Seized at Cottage in Woods

Three Chelsea men were surrounded and captured in the woods of Millis after a desperate chase by prohibition agents, during which several shots were fired.

The pursuit followed a raid on the Angel Belmont cottage in a clearing in the woods, in which 1,300 gallons of mash and 400 pounds of sugar were seized.

The men taken gave their names and addresses as follows: Isaac Lister, Franklin avenue, Chelsea; Benjamin Schwartz, Chelsea street, East Boston, and Alex Charing, Washington street, Chelsea. Belmont was not arrested.

The raid on the Angel Belmont place was the culminating achievement of a busy and exciting night for the prohibition man, who swept through Millis and Blackstone in fast automobiles and confiscated stills, hundreds of gallons of mash and $3,000 worth of liquor in the rounds.

FRITZI SCHEFF ILL IN BOSTON HOTEL

Vaudeville Star Says It's Tonsilitis, Not Temperament

Fear of being considered temperamental caused Fritzi Scheff to go on at Keith's this week with tonsilitis and a temperature of 102. She is now off the bill and under a physician's care at the Touraine, while Sophie Tucker has replaced her as a headliner for the week.

"Somehow a terrible reputation has got around about me," declared Miss Scheff this morning. "People think I would refuse to sing if I didn't like the way the violin player parted his hair, or if I objected to the color the theatre was painted.

"I came to Boston really ill and against my physician's orders just to show that I wouldn't cancel my appearance if I was able to drag myself to the theatre. I was hardly able to go through my numbers and, of course, I didn't do myself justice, but I think I demonstrated that I am not in the least temperamental and it takes something serious to knock me out.

"My relations with the United Booking Office are cordial, and they have assured me that I can continue my tour in three weeks when I am well again."

Mr. Larsen, the Boston manager, was perfectly lovely, and so were the auditioners. And yet no sooner did I disappear from the bill than a rival vaudeville concern made me a big offer because they instantly concluded that I must have had a falling out with the management. Honestly, I am not like that at all."

STEPDAUGHTER OF GOV. SPRAGUE SEEKS DIVORCE

Disputes Motherhood of Four-Year-Old Son of Wealthy Porto Rican Husband

Providence, R. I., Sept. 22—Oral testimony began today at the resumed hearing of the suit for divorce brought against Wenceslao Borda, wealthy Porto Rican planter by his wife, Mrs. Alvin Weed Sprague Borda, stepdaughter and daughter-in-law of War Governor Sprague of Rhode Island.

Borda, who has filed a cross-suit for divorce, was again refused the right to withdraw his suit. Judge J. Jerome Hahn, before whom the case is proceeding in Superior Court here, denying the formal application made by George Hurley, attorney for Borda.

Mrs. Borda charges unlawful conduct with other women by her husband and asked the formal dissolution of her marriage ties.

It was expected that during the day the trial of the case would reach the sensational charges which Mrs. Borda has made regarding the maternity of the four-year-old son of Borda. She has denied that she is the child's mother and asked the court to compel Borda to disclose the name of the child's real parent.

INJUNCTION IGNORED

At the opening of the trial it was announced that an injunction forbidding Borda to prosecute his suit against his wife in the courts of Porto Rico had been ignored and that the island courts had found in favor of the rich planter.

Hurley explained to the court that the action of his client in disobeying the injunction and bringing suit in the Porto Rican courts had been taken against his judgment and advice.

Ever since the day when the young war governor of Rhode Island returned unexpectedly to his beautiful home, Canonchet, and found his young wife, Kate Cease Sprague, entertaining Senator Roscoe Conkling, Republican leader of New York, the history of that branch of the Sprague family has been one of trouble.

INHERITED MILLIONS.

Shortly after that William Sprague, Jr., the Governor's son, married Avis Weed, daughter of his stepmother, his own stepsister. He lived but a short time.

Mrs. Sprague then married Colonel Gerrit S. Wheaton, a member of the Standard Oil group and enormously wealthy. He also died after a few years and she inherited his millions. Her third marriage, the one she is now attempting to have dissolved, was to Borda, at one time consular representative for the United States to Porto Rico and later a wealthy planter of the Islands.

Borda is reported to be in Porto Rico and the whereabouts of the baby boy, whose maternity is in question, is not known, though he is believed to be with his father.

POLICE TO AID 'NO ACCIDENT' CRUSADE

Curtis Orders Patrolmen to Check "Hopping" of Rides by Children

Special efforts to prevent accidents to children during "no accident" week, which begins next Sunday, will be made by the 1,400 policemen of Boston as a result of a general order issued today by Commissioner Edwin U. Curtis.

A supreme effort will be made by the police of this city to stop children's practice of "stealing" rides on trolley cars, automobiles and wagons. Every boy and girl who "hops" a vehicle for a ride next week may land in a police station on account of Commissioner Curtis' order. Children who walk railroad tracks or visit railway yards to pick up coal or ice may find themselves in the same predicament.

TO READ ORDER DAILY.

The order is to be read at roll call every day during "no accident" week. In this order the commissioner says that policemen shall pay particular attention to prevent accidents to "jaywalkers" and intoxicated persons.

His order follows in part:

"Every member of the police force will do his utmost consistently with the faithful performance of his duty to avoid accidents himself, and do everything possible to prevent accidents happening to anyone else. Policemen will make it a point to watch carefully for children stealing rides on surface cars of a railway company, automobiles and vehicles of all descriptions. When boys or girls are found stealing rides on automobiles, surface cars or any other kinds of vehicles, the officer will first stop the vehicle, then take the child from the vehicle, take his or her name and address and report the same to his commanding officer, who will see that a report is made by a capable officer to the parents or guardians of the child.

"The officer will tell the parent, or parents, that it is not always the hopping on the vehicle that is the real danger but the fact of jumping off and running in front of a vehicle which oftentimes prove fatal to the child.

TO ARREST TRESPASSERS

"Division commanders will instruct officers patrolling in the vicinity of railroad tracks and railroad yards to arrest all persons found trespassing on railroad property. Boys and girls under seventeen years of age, if found walking on railroad or any railroad yards, trespassing, should be brought to the station house and kept there until the, parents are notified and come to the station, when the boy or girl will be given over to them.

"It is a common practice for children, especially during the warm weather to go to railroad yards to get pieces of ice to bring to their homes, and in Winter time for the purpose of picking up coal. Officers will see that this practice, by children especially, is discontinued. If it cannot be stopped by warning, such children will be prosecuted in Juvenile Court."

The commissioner also orders division commanders to caution officers who operate patrol wagons, ambulances and motorcycles to be particularly careful to observe the traffic laws.

To Demand Nation Pay Allowance to Jobless

Chicago, Sept. 22.—A mass meeting to demand work or a federal unemployment allowance equal to at least 75 per cent of current wages will be held Sunday afternoon in Washington square park by the Amalgamated Metal Workers of America. The meeting will be in support of a program for the relief of the unemployed, which the metal workers have submitted to congress. The plan asks a minimum of $30 a week for all unemployed workers, the allowance to be raised by a tax "levied on all salaries and incomes in excess of $5,000 a year that is derived from non-productive sources."

HIGHEST HONOR IN MASONRY FOR HARDING

Thirty-Third Degree to Be Conferred on the President

President Harding was today elected to receive the thirty-third degree in the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite, at the annual meeting of the Thirty-third Degree Masons at Masonic Temple.

The President will be given the degree at the next annual meeting of the organization in Cleveland. It was said he would have received this honorary degree in Boston at the present convention, had it not been for the press of public business at Washington.

To receive the thirty-third degree is the highest honor that can be conferred in Masonry. Only those invited may be initiated into the degree. The President is now a thirty-second degree Mason.

Today marked the close of the Supreme Council convention. New officers for the ensuing three years were inducted into office, and the retiring sovereign grand commander, Barton Smith, made a brief address of thanks for the privilege of having served as an officer in the council.

It was decided to put over for a year the question of adopting the twenty-fifth degree, according to the new form. In the meantime further study into the advisability of a change will be made.

Holds 13 Diamonds In Bridge Whist, Scores 716

By Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 22.—During a game at the New York Bridge Whist Club one player held all the diamonds and scored 716 points.

Experts said it was the first incident of its kind on record. That the greatest number of cards of one suit previously known to have been held in one hand was ten.

Henry C. Dottenheim was the fortunate player. He bid seven diamonds and was doubled by his opponents after they had bid six hearts. He redoubled and scored as follows: 196 below the line on game, 100 for a grand slam, 100 for keeping his contract redoubled, 70 for five honors in one hand and 250 for winning the rubber.

GIVES DIVORCE TO 'OATMEAL BRIDE'

Judge Orders Contractor to Pay Mrs. Hadley $15 a Week As Alimony

Worcester, Sept. 22.—Hereafter Mrs. Ella V. Hadley, wife of William G. Hadley, a local contractor, will not have to eat oatmeal at all unless she wants to.

Judge O'Connell has granted her her divorce from her husband, and has ordered the contractor to pay her $15 weekly alimony.

At the time of the trial of the suit Mrs. Hadley told many stories of what she termed her husband's "stinginess." She declared their wedding breakfast consisted of two small bowls of oatmeal without milk or sugar, and that for months after that they had oatmeal for breakfast, dinner and supper every day—and little else.

Their wedding trip, she declared, consisted of a six-mile trolley ride to Boylston, where, to save expense, they stopped at the house of a relative of Hadley.

Hadley, she said in her testimony, had refused to go to church, "because they take up collections there and it's too costly." The contractor is reputed to be worth about $150,000.

THIEVES TRY TO STEAL BRONZE DOG IN PARK

Providence, Sept. 22.—Thieves attempted to steal the huge bronze dog that guards the merry-go-round and driveway in Roger Williams Park, according to Superintendent of Parks Trugg today. He says the dog, which weighs all of half a ton, was moved a foot or more from its base. During the war thieves looted the old guns and cannon balls from the park, but the guns were later recovered in Boston junk shops.

Several Others Have Narrow Escapes in Park Accident

One workman was buried under tons of dirt and several others narrowly escaped a like fate when the walls of an excavation job on Linden Park street, in Roxbury, caved in today.

Police of Station 16 dug for a half hour before they succeeded in rescuing the victim, John Costa, of No. 1137 Tremont street.

He was taken to the City Hospital, barely alive, and his name was placed on the danger list.

Hundreds of residents of the neighborhood crowded into Linden Park street when they learned of the accident, and extra police were sent to prevent them from falling into the pit or otherwise embarassing the workers in the rescuers.

N. Y. PRINTERS FACE FIGHT ON OPEN SHOP

Union Officials Are Asked to Submit Wage Issue to Arbitration

New York, Sept. 22.—Possibility of an open shop fight in the printing industry here faced the executive council of the International Typographical Union and officers of "Big Six" local union today, when they met to consider demands of employing printers for arbitration of a new wage scale, effective October 1.

The National Publishers' Association, comprising publishers of many magazines of national circulation, made public a resolution yesterday, calling on the printers to arbitrate and asserting that the association would "earnestly request" the New York Employing Printers' Association to put the open shop into effect unless arbitration was agreed upon.

The publishers have demanded a 10 per cent. wage cut, which the union countered with a demand for an increase from $50 to $55 a week.

Picking a Car's Name May Make You Richer

Boston American Offers $1,500 in Rewards for Those Who Know the Makes of Automobiles

THE REWARDS
First reward	$500
Second reward	200
Third reward	100
Fourth reward	50
Fifth reward	40
Sixth reward	30
Seventh reward	20
25 rewards of $10 each	250
62 rewards of $5 each	310
Total	$1,500

Suppose a very generous reward were offered for information leading to the recovery of a stolen automobile. Could you hope to earn it?

Do you know "one automobile from another?" Can you tell the make of a car at a glance?

How about this generation? How about you bright, eager-eyed young folks, with your heads up and your chins out, who have the world at your feet? DO you know the automobiles?

In order to find out the Boston American is about to inaugurate a Name-This-Auto Competition. We wish to determine how many readers of this newspaper can identify an automobile without seeing the nameplate.

Rewards to the amount of $1,500 will be paid to those who prove most successful in naming the different makes of cars. In addition to naming the cars contestants will be asked to submit fifty-word suggestions in the Boston American's Walk-Right-Drive-Right movement.

Pictures of Fifty Auto Cars Will Be Printed, One at a Time

Better Reserve Your Paper Now to Get Into Test

THE BOSTON AMERICAN'S Name-This-Auto Contest begins next Monday.

Details of the contest are outlined on this page. Further information will be given tomorrow. The first auto drawing will appear on Monday, together with the rules and the complete list of awards.

In order to have an opportunity to win one of the ninety-four rewards it will be necessary for participants to submit a name for each of fifty drawings.

It is advisable, therefore, to make reservations for the Boston American in advance.

Go to your newsdealer at once and make sure of your Boston American for next Monday. There will be a big demand for the paper on that day. While you are about it, it will be well to order the paper for the full fifty-day period of the Name-This-Auto Contest.

The first picture in the Name-this-Auto Competition will appear in the Boston American next Monday, Sept. 26. The total number of pictures will be fifty. There will be one picture each week-day for a sixty-day period, not counting Sundays.

The pictures will give a partial view of each car. There will be no car you "never heard of before." ALL pictures will represent cars of well known makes.

If, as is likely to happen, you do not know all the automobiles at first sight, you will have a perfect right to seek and obtain assistance wherever you can find it. Ask the traffic cop. Appeal to the garage man. Get the assistance of that friend of yours who is sure to "know them all." OR, spend a few minutes each day on the curbing, Boston American in hand. Look them over. Study the cars. Eventually you will find the car in the picture.

"But," you say, "suppose I have a perfect score in identification. I have the name of being thorough about anything I undertake. I'll name the entire fifty, and name them correctly. Is there anything else I must do?"

There is. Each and every contestant will be expected to write a fifty-word suggestion in furtherance of the Walk-Right-Drive-Right idea.

Do you believe pedestrians are always as careful as they might be?

How would you make them more careful?

Some drivers are reckless. What would you do about them?

Do existing laws offer adequate protection to pedestrians and drivers?

What would you suggest by way of improving these laws?

No matter what your suggestion, let it be one that will lessen the number of accidents. The Competition begins, you will observe, in No Accidents Week. Everybody in New England is interested. The Boston American wants the best suggestions its readers have to offer. That is why we are conducting the competition. Walk Right! Drive Right! To add to the interest, $1,500 will be given away in prizes. You are asked, first, to identify the cars; and, second, to write a helpful fifty-word suggestion.

Between now and Monday, when Picture No. 1 will be printed, you might give a little of your time to the study of such machines as you see near at hand. Each and every make has something distinctive about it. The man who made it, or who helped to make it, can tell it among hundreds. Find out what that "something" is. Before the competition is over you will be able to name any sort of car at a considerable distance.

Tell your friends about the Name-this-Auto-Competition. Anyone may enter who resides in territory reached by the Boston American. Above all things, be sure you are going to have next Monday's paper. Speak to the newsdealer now about it.

PASTOR BLAMES MINOR FACTION FOR TROUBLE

Brookline Minister, Whose Removal is Sought, Says Main Body is Behind Him

Members of the Presbyterian Church of Brookline are observing a season of watchful waiting just now, pending the decision of the Presbytery, a governing board of the Presbyterian Church, in regard to a report made to them by a church committee, asking for the removal of the pastor, Rev. Edwin Curtis. The Brookline church is divided into factions, and, in most every quarter, silence is the word pending the decision.

That the Rev. Mr. Curtis is not a Presbyterian, but is and was a Congregationalist, and that he is not liked by the church people seems to be the gist of the opposition to the minister. In the meantime, while sentiment seethes at the First Presbyterian Church, the pastor awaits the outcome with equanimity. As he explained:

BLAMES MINOR FACTION.

"It is not dignified or fitting that I should take up any of the specific details in regard to the trouble at my church. Just let me say that, as to the facts, I should be as silent as a juror before the decision is granted. It would be like contempt of court, if I were not. But I suppose I might as well say that all this trouble is caused by a very minor faction of trouble makers in the parish.

"It is enough for me to know that the main body of the church is with me. If it were not I would not wait for a decision, but resign at once. If I had not been assured, by the majority of my people, that they were pained at the disturbance and wanted me to be their pastor, I would not endure the unpleasantness caused by a very few.

"I have tolerated much, because I loved the church and loved the people. They are so splendid. They have been so very nice to Mrs. Curtis and myself, strangers in a strange land. For, you know, within the year we came over from England. And last February we came here to the Presbyterian Church."

WIFE SECONDS HUSBAND.

Mrs. Curtis sat by her husband as he spoke and loyally seconded his words.

"We have been well received here," said she, "and that's why we love America so much. That's why we stay in this parish, confident of the outcome although my husband has had several offers from churches elsewhere. For we know the truth, and we know our people; this church is a great field of labor, and so we await the decision of the Presbytery with confidence and not with anxiety."

Elder Daniel Marshall of the church and the body that rendered the report to the Presbytery acknowledged that he had sent the pastor's photograph to England to find out if he was the same man he said he was.

"I make no charges against the pastor," said he, "at least I make no charges until the report is rendered. The pastor may be an excellent material for some churches. As to the failing away in the congregation, however, since he came to us, no comment is needed. The figures speak for themselves."

U. S. UNABLE TO DEPORT 100 RUSSIAN ANARCHISTS

Washington, Sept. 22.—More than 100 Russian anarchists are at liberty in this country, under bonds which are covered by $50,000 in Liberty bonds deposited with the Secretary of Labor, it was stated today at the Department of Labor. On account of the refusal of the Russian Soviet government to accept them, it has been impossible to deport them.

DRUGGISTS AGAINST TAX BOOST ON SOFT DRINKS

Denver, Colo., Sept. 22.—The American public will put a stop for any more increases in the price of soft drinks as the result of war taxes and as opposed to federal taxes on toilet goods and proprietary medicines, in the opinion of the National Association of Retail Druggists, which is holding its 22d annual convention here. The association adopted recommendations of the legislative committee that the convention ask Congress for relief.

The druggists also voted to ask for enactment of the amendment of the internal revenue laws and the national prohibition act so as to remove the classification of retail druggists as retail liquor dealers.

What Mrs. R— Found out about Tea

A hostess, well known in the more exclusive set, had for years been buying an expensive fancy Russian tea. One day at a friend's house she tasted La Touraine Orange Pekoe and since that day she has never used any other kind. And this change was not because La Touraine Tea costs less, but because she agreed with the experts that it was "a tea of such delightful flavor that better could not be desired."

And we believe that if you try La Touraine once, you too will prefer it to any tea you have ever tasted. La Touraine Tea is on sale at practically all good grocery stores throughout New England. Order some from your grocer today. Look for the La Touraine sign or the La Touraine package on the shelves of your dealer.

In Ill Health 10 Years—Says Gland Pills Were God-Send

Mr. Cole So Weak He Could Hardly Drag Himself to Work—Says He Now Feels "Like a School Boy" Again.

"During the past ten years I have spent much money taking various treatments and medicines for my ill health, but nothing gave me permanent relief until I started taking Glandex Compound, which did me more good than all the medicines I have ever taken," said Mr. Clarence R. Cole, for 15 years a well-known resident of East Boston, living at 121 Trenton Street.

"The very first bottle brought a surprising improvement in me, so I continued. I have now taken six bottles and I have not felt so well in years. My appetite which was very poor, is again as good as ever, and my stomach trouble has completely disappeared. I suffered a great deal with rheumatism and dull headaches, yet these have all left me. I was very nervous, and could not get any rest at night, but I have gotten all over my nervousness and now I sleep fine every night. At one time I thought I would have to give up and quit work altogether, but now I can go out on the job and do as much work as any man and never feel tired out when night comes. I have more ambition and energy than I ever had. My wife says she never saw me looking so well. I really feel like a school boy again! Glandex was surely a god-send to me and I recommend it at every opportunity."

Amazing Results Everywhere

The reason Glandex brings such amazing results in so many cases is because it helps build up run-down glands—which science now says are the cause of many run-down conditions. Glandex feeds run-down human glands with extracts taken from the glands of vigorous sheep and cattle. Practically on the same principle as re-charging a storage battery! Also contains iron and other well known health builders.

If weak, pale, thin or generally run-down get this remarkable tonic. Brings results—or your money back. Has helped thousands to regain health and strength. Try a bottle! Sold at good druggists everywhere.

CHILDREN ONLY INTEREST OF MRS. STOKES

Calls Decision Over Husband a Victory for Every Good Mother

Denver, Sept. 22. — Does divorce mean happiness, and how many couples find contentment without a trace of regret in a second marriage?

Not many, in the opinion of Mrs. Helen Elwood Stokes, who was granted a decree of separation from her millionaire husband, W. E. D. Stokes, and the custody of her two children, James and Helen Muriel, by a New York court, following a long legal battle. She said:

"The decision is not only a victory for me, but discloses the attitude of the world and the law toward those who endeavor to take the children away from a good woman. My suffering will not have been in vain if I have encouraged but one woman to fight for the right to keep what is dearest to her, her children.

"I do not believe in divorce. I am separated, but I married Mr. Stokes and I still consider myself married and the mother of my children, whose welfare is my only interest in life.

"I simply have not been brought up to believe that I could marry more than one man.

"I do not disapprove of other women's divorces. It is their life and they should do as they choose with it.

"I do not believe that divorced couples are ever really happy. Do you know of any who are?

"I am old-fashioned in a number of ways. That is why some question my motives for enduring my troubles for so long.

"Ask any good woman and mother of children why she endures humiliation! That is the answer."

Mrs. Stokes refused to discuss her husband and declared that she will disappear from the public eye, and her only interest will be the welfare of James, seven years old last week, and Helen Muriel, just five.

SULLIVAN AGAIN FAILS TO SWIM THE CHANNEL

Dover, Eng., Sept. 22.—Henry Sullivan of Lowell, Mass., who yesterday afternoon made a fifth attempt to swim across the English Channel, was obliged to abandon his effort before reaching the French coast. When he decided to give up the attempt he had reached a point twelve miles off this city.

Sullivan was forced to abandon his swim because of coldness of the water, after swimming nine hours. He was taken from the water at 11:20 o'clock last night.

FIGHT CLOSING OF NEWPORT STATION

Conference of New England Governors Called by Chamber of Commerce

Newport, R. I., Sept. 22.—A conference of New England Governors to suggest steps to oppose the proposed closing of the famous old naval training station here is to be urged by the Newport Chamber of Commerce in a letter to Governor Emery J. San Souci.

This move was decided upon at a meeting of the chamber, where the decision to fight hard to retain the station was reached. The chamber directors, the naval affairs committee, Congressman Clark Burdick and Mayor J. P. Mahoney were all present at the meeting.

It was brought out that the Washington authorities have been reducing the number of men at the old station until the total is now far below that of former years, and the belief was expressed that it is merely a matter of a short time before the order to close the station is received.

The Board of Aldermen at tonight's meeting will be asked to send a representative to Washington to oppose any move to discontinue the activities of the station.

Chambers of Commerce throughout New England will be asked to lend the fight against abandonment all possible assistance, and it is expected that they will do so.

The two Rhode Island Senators have been appealed to by the Chamber of Commerce in a message which points out that recruits in the New England and Eastern District are now being sent to the Norfolk station, and urging that this state of affairs be investigated and if possible prevented.

Chaplin Buys Morning Trousers With White Stripes

By C. F. BERTELLI,
Special Correspondent of Boston American.

Paris, Sept. 22.—Charlie Chaplin's ambition to be the "most dressed" man in the United States is likely to be realized when he returns home. Charlie assured his friends here that the real purpose of his visit to London and Paris is merely to replenish his wardrobe.

"Women come to Europe to buy clothes. Why not men?" he remarked.

A fitter from one of the most exclusive London tailors arrived in Paris by airplane. It was disclosed that Chaplin had ordered eighteen morning suits, three of them edged with velvet with white stripes down the trousers; five afternoon suits with the latest wasp-waist effect, and a dinner coat patterned after Andre de Fouquiere's innovation in white satin striped with black.

TWO ARE ARRESTED IN WEST END AFTER FIGHT

George McKenna of Main street, Charlestown, and Alfred Walton of the South End, were arrested after a fight with officers of Station 3 on Staniford street, West End, and locked up, charged with unlawful possession of narcotics. They were held in $500 each for hearing September 28.

FIANCE SUES TO REGAIN RING AND FUR

Cambridge Man Also Seeks Damages for Money Spent on Bridal Apartments

In an effort to get back a $1,000 diamond ring and a $340 fur coat which he says he gave to Miss Lillian Rubenstein of No. 32 Highland road, Somerville, as engagement presents, John Freedman of No. [illegible] William street, Cambridge, appeared in the equity session of Suffolk Superior Court today. He sought an injunction to restrain the girl from disposing of the engagement gifts.

He asks reimbursement for furnishing an apartment to which he planned to take his bride.

Freedman charges that he and Miss Rubenstein became engaged on or about May 1, and that September 1 was set as the wedding day. After giving her the diamond ring and fur coat as engagement tokens, Freedman says he leased an apartment and began to furnish it, spending a large amount of money.

He alleges that on July 17 when he called at Miss Rubenstein's home her father objected to further preparations for the wedding. The youthful swain says his prospective father-in-law said that unless he was in a position to do better than planned or could induce his (Freedman's) father to take him into his business the wedding would be called off.

Three days later, Freedman says he called at his fiancee's home and learned that she had gone to Texas, having been sent there by her father. A month later he says he called on Rubenstein and was informed that the daughter did not intend to keep her promise.

The girl's father, J. Rubenstein, said he was willing his daughter should return the coat and ring provided Freedman gave back a diamond stick-pin which his daughter had presented to him. He said that his daughter and Freedman met two months ago and became engaged three weeks later. He said that Freedman exaggerated his salary and financial prospects. When the couple spoke of marriage he said he did not favor a hurried one and his daughter agreed.

Rubenstein added that although his daughter was willing to return both ring and coat he believed the coat was a present from Freedman's mother.

U. S. MAKING PROGRESS IN CANCER TREATMENT

New York, Sept. 22.—Stimulated by the recent visit to the United States of Mme. Curie, its discoverer, scientists in this country are making new progress in treating cancer with radium, according to R. B. Moore, chief chemist of the United States Bureau of Mines. The highly scientific treatment of disease by the use of radium, however, Moore says, is successful only when applied with the greatest skill.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

Touring Car $355 F. O. B. Detroit

Why are They So Popular?

Is it price? Yes, but not entirely so.

Is it economical upkeep and maintenance? Yes, but that is not all.

Is it endurance? Yes, that has much to do with it, yet that is not all.

It is the downright dependability of the car; the fact that it is always ready and willing; the fact that it is easily handled and controlled in small spaces; the fact that it will go everywhere any car will go, and a great many places where others won't go.

It is all of these things that make it the every-duty car for business and for pleasure.

Fresh From Paris
Latest Word From Marie Suzanne

Paris, France.

IN a good many charming instances Paris couturieres have retained the slender silhouette of the past season, dropping the neckline and the hemline for variation. This course is followed in the case of a wearable little afternoon frock of black crepe Mongole, having all of its bodice and part of its skirt of white crepe figured in black. Draped side panel lengthen into points that make the hemline smartly uneven, and in spite of the prevalent decorated sleeve one may still be entirely in the mode without any sleeve at all.

Here and there among the frocks exhibited at the Paris openings were those that adopted cushioned bands as their decorative theme, and always with pleasing effect. At the right, mauve satin crushes into happy little folds, each band narrowly piped with French blue satin. The picoted ribbon that slips out of sight for a moment and finishes with flying ends is of French blue cire satin.

COURT ACTION FOR PROVIDENCE LANDLORDS

Mayor to Act on Flood of Complaints of Raises Up to 50 Per Cent.

Providence, Sept. 22.—Steps are being taken by Mayor Joseph H. Gainer to prevent rent profiteering in this city. Despite the fact that a great number of family men are unemployed, landlords have increased rents and a flood of complaints have reached the Mayor's office.

The reason for raising rents at the present time is beyond the comprehension of anyone. Taxes have not advanced for more than a year and the cost of building and repairing of property has decreased materially.

Scores of families have been affected by this situation through unemployment or through reduced wages many are unable to meet the additional rent forced upon them by landlords and they are unable to move elsewhere because of the shortage of houses.

It is believed that the landlords are taking advantage of this shortage and are playing to the "supply and demand." Knowing that their tenants will not be able to find another home they are boosting the rent and getting as much as possible for their tenement. Some of the rents have been raised as high as 50 per cent. during the past month.

It is likely that Mayor Gainer will take some of the cases to court as was done last Winter.

Dogs the Big Issue in Campaign Near Chicago

Chicago, Sept. 22.—Dogs is the campaign issue for the coming election in Wilmette, fashionable suburb of Chicago.

A movement was started there to defeat Edward Zipf, president of the village, in the next election to bring about the repeal of his order to kill all roaming dogs at sight.

Prince, a collie pup, brought the issue to a head. While playing with four children in the street he was shot down by a policeman.

"This is too much," said the angry populace at a mass meeting today. "We will oust Zipf and save our dogs."

Her skull was fractured and she suffered other possible internal injuries. An operation on the skull was immediately performed.

DRYS FOILED IN SENATE BEER BILL MOVE

By Universal Service.

Washington, Sept. 22.—Threats of a filibuster by the forces supporting the Stanley search warrant amendment brought a sharp halt to a movement by the "drys" to call up and jam the anti-beer bill conference report through the Senate.

Senator Sterling of South Dakota, in charge of the conference report, served notice that he will move today to displace the unfinished business before the Senate and to take up the anti-beer measure. The unfinished business is the pre-volstead bill, and Senator Borah, its author, indicated a willingness to have it laid aside temporarily.

Efforts to force action on the beer bill caused an unexpected flurry. It had been understood that the opening day would be given over to the formal reconvening and no business would be transacted.

When Senator Borah indicated a willingness to lay aside his measure, Senator Reed objected. The Missouri Senator also blocked an effort to fix a date for a vote on the beer bill by unanimous consent.

It was at this point, that Senator Sterling served notice he would move to lay aside the unfinished business today. But complications for the bill designed to prevent medicinal beer again are certain to arise. Senator Penrose, chairman of the Finance Committee, announced he will move today to take up the tax revision bill and keep it before the Senate until it is passed. This is expected to consume at least two weeks.

NEW WAY TO TAKE YEAST

In Convenient Tablet Form Combined with Iron and Other Health Builders.

Quickly Builds New Flesh, Strength and Health

No need to eat yeast cakes any more! Take yeast the new easy way—in pleasant tablet form, as embodied in Ironized Yeast.

Everyone has heard of the seeming miracles performed by yeast, especially in cases of loss of weight, weakness, poor appetite, mal-nutrition and general "run-down" conditions.

The reason for these amazing results is that yeast contains a certain mysterious element called vitamines which we do not get in our present-day diet, but which are vital to our physical needs for good health and absolutely necessary for good health and proper physical development.

Ironized Yeast contains highly concentrated brewer's yeast which is far richer in vitamines than ordinary baking yeast. In addition, it contains iron and other well-known health builders, so that you really get two splendid tonics in one.

If you want to put on good solid flesh, if you want to increase your strength so that you can tackle hard work and enjoy it, if you want to put good healthy color in your cheeks, and feel "fit" all the time—then try Ironized Yeast. The firm for clearing up sallow and blotchy skin.

In most cases Ironized Yeast will bring a decided improvement by the third day. The sallowest complexions will usually be cleared up in less than two weeks. Find out how it is to be in perfect health all the time! Get Ironized Yeast today. Packed in convenient flask-like package that you can slip in your vest pocket. Cost no more per dose than common yeast. Each package contains 10 days' treatment and costs only $1.80—or just 18c. a day. Special directions for children in each package. Made by the Ironized Yeast Company, Atlanta, Ga.

RUSSIAN POLICY DUE TO CHANGE, SAYS HAPGOOD

State Department Is Relaxing Rigid Attitude Toward Soviet, Writer Declares

By NORMAN HAPGOOD
(Staff Correspondent of the Boston American.)

Washington, Sept. 22.—Not long ago I heard a surprising statement from somebody close to the President. "There is going to be a change in our Russian policy," he said. "And it will not be long in coming."

Whether the man was right or wrong I cannot say, but now that the relief administration is actually dealing with the Soviet government the distinction between that and government dealings is pretty thin.

On one point I am glad to say I was mistaken. It turns out that the State Department, instead of refusing a passport to the great Russian Singer Shaliapin, has cabled to our consul at Riga to give the visa. This is a rational and generous act that deserves full appreciation.

ATTITUDE NOT RIGID.

It also indicates that the State Department is not absolutely rigid in its attitude, since Shaliapin, besides being a great singer, is also apparently an enthusiastic Communist. At least that impression has gained belief, although only from the way he has thrown himself into singing under government auspices.

The Soviet government was compelled to treat Shaliapin well, in order to keep the irascible artist in the proper mood for cheering up thousands of hungry and ragged Bolshevists. He is a person who demands what he wants under any government.

If he does come over here it will be interesting to see what auspices he sings under. The Relief Association would be the best if it made no conditions, but if it did make conditions the singer would doubtless blow up immediately.

RELIEF IS PARAMOUNT.

The Quakers could undoubtedly get on with him, as they get on with everybody. The important thing is not the auspices. It is to save as many Russians as possible as soon as possible.

Nevertheless it in wise to pay some attention to public psychology. If Shaliapin wants to do the best he can for his starving countrymen he will not sing under the auspices of any Communist or semi-Communist group in America.

That would be to introduce politics, from his end, into what ought to be a cause too big for any consideration except human sympathy. He is coming, if he does come, to a country where Communism is wholly negligible, and it is his business to appear in a way that will appeal to the large, wholesome heart of the whole people, not to the fanaticism of a handful.

HELD UP IN ENGLAND.

We get out of the Shaliapin matter with more comfort than the British; although the British have been much more tolerant than we have on the subject of Russia in general, somebody in the Home Office held up Shaliapin's passport.

Immediately there was a howl of derision and contempt from the Liberal and Labor elements.

The government had no intention of supporting the functionary who had made the mistake. So it announced through the Home Office that if Shaliapin wished a reconsideration it could only be on the understanding that he was coming over in order to sing for relief.

Thus was illustrated once more the noble science of face-saving. It makes possible many good acts which otherwise the human being, homosapiens, would be too proud to perform.

On the relief administration, even more than on the State Department, depends the question of whether our record in Russia, after being so long pedantic and cruelly obstructive, is at last to become modest and helpful.

STEPS DESERVE APPROVAL.

The first steps of the relief administration, as far as the dispatches throw light on the situation, deserve approval. They seem to have been business like and without any mixture of politics.

If they remain like that the American people will have a medium for doing much human good, and atoning for their share in prolonging the Russian agony.

One thing for which the relief association specifically deserves approval is in its agreement with the Soviet government not to take in any expatriated Russians without its consent. To allow any role whatever to the little bands of propagandists in Paris, Washington and New York would be fatal at the start.

There are broad-minded Russians like Alexander Berkenkeim and many others, who could be of large constructive assistance, but it would be foolish to try to get any of them in until the Lenin faction of the Bolsheviks is ready to invite them.

In this production "Doug" has achieved the ambition of his life—and registers what is by all odds the great outstanding success of his career.
His is a remarkable, clear-cut portrayal of the noble D'Artagnan, the wonderful hero of Dumas' amazing novel of Mediaeval France.
This tremendous film is the happy culmination of a desire of years on Fairbanks' part to enact what is conceded to be the most striking and heroic figure in all literature.

An Easy Way For Thin People to Put on Flesh and Gain Weight

Strong, Straightforward Advice to Thin, Undeveloped Men and Women

If you are thin, scrawny and undeveloped, if your face is pasted and your cheeks and neck exhibit unsightly hollows, it's almost certain that your nervous system is at the bottom of the trouble. Too run out there, you four, substantial fat producing meals a day but as long as your stomach has an insufficient supply of nerve force this food you eat will pass out of the body with little if any benefit.

In order to assimilate properly the nourishing food you eat and convert it into healthy tissue and fatty deposits, you must control the process of digestion and assimilation so that it gets what it needs and will that is done you might just as well not bother to eat, because your system is starving for something that will turn the food you eat into healthy skin here flesh and it can only be done in one way—by supplying fatty nervous digestion.

Thin, nervous, run-down people, however, with starvation blood and half starved looks are heeding with delight the tidings that a new discovery called KVANS TRIPLE PHOSPHATES is at last furnishing the required ingredient and correcting nervous digestion troubles. In fact the makers of Kvans Triple Phosphates guarantee that one month's treatment will increase your weight by several pounds and will in ten days make you feel like a new being, full of ambition, vigor and energy. If for any reason it is claimed for it or manner refunded. Caution: While Kvans' Triple Phosphates accomplishes wonders in nervous digestion, they are not a panacea for other ills, and should not be used by anyone who objects to a few additional pounds of solid satisfying flesh.—Advertisement.

Hair Often Ruined By Careless Washing

Soap should be used very carefully, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoos (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than anything you can use.

One or two teaspoonsful of Mulsified will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to arrange.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at any pharmacy. It is very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months. Be sure your druggist gives you Mulsified.—Advertisement.

Fat That Shows Soon Disappears

Prominent fat that comes and stays where it is not needed is a burden; a hindrance to activity, a curb upon pleasure. You can take off the fat where it shows by taking after each meal and at bedtime, one Marmola Prescription Tablet. These little tablets are as effective and harmless as the famous prescription from which they take their name. Buy and try a case today. Your druggist sells them at one dollar, or if you prefer you may write direct to the Marmola Company, 4612 Woodward Ave., Detroit, Mich. You can thus say good bye to dieting, exercise and fat.—Advertisement.

TAKE BEECHAM'S PILLS FOR CONSTIPATION

TIDE OF MISERY STARTS FOR THE VOLGA

By MARY HEATON VORSE.

(Noted author, especially commissioned by Universal Service to visit the Samara famine district in Russia.)

(Copyright, 1921, by Universal Service.)

Moscow, Sept. 21 (Delayed via radio from Riga to Berlin)—There is a barometer of starvation. The number of that barometer children deserted in any community is

In Saratoff only thirty-five abandoned children were found daily. In the month of May in Samara that same number was found every day. Now the number is between 100 and 200 daily.

In Saratoff the party of President Kalinin has come into a different hunger zone. In the villages to the north, away from the river, where hunger is gripping the peasants the hardest, the outward tide of misery has started for the Volga and the railway stations.

Large refugee camps have been built on the town's outskirts as the starvation tide mounts.

But hunger does not yet stalk through the streets. We walked through large empty thoroughfares without finding hunger-stricken people dying

COVERT, NO BEDS.

We chanced on a children's home which was partly devoted to abandoned children. Among them were forty children from the German colonies. Many of the children were lying on the floor taking an afternoon rest. They have covers for the children here, but no beds.

When we entered the children gathered around us. Two of the children who had been here for some time were beginning to look again like children. Another little girl might be a sister to the hunted and beaten child we saw in Marksstadt. Her sad little face was scarred with lines and her hands were only claws.

I asked a tall child of fourteen how long she had been here and she began to cry.

"What is the matter?" I asked. A little girl who looked like an old woman crept close to me, and explained:

"She's homesickness hurts her. She is always crying."

"Our homesickness hurts us all, but we don't cry," said a little skeleton, slipping a bony claw into my hand. "She would not cry," said the child with the lined face. "She did not have to wander around hungry like the rest of us. She starved at home."

WANDERED FOR WEEK.

"Did you wander around?" I asked, though I knew that nothing else could have left such marks on her face.

"For a long time," she answered. "For many weeks." All my people died and I had no home. I slept under the sky and I knocked on doors in the villages. I begged people to take me in. I told them I would work hard for them. But no one wanted me—I guess I am too little. Now I am glad they did not take me because it is better here."

I asked her how she got here.

"A Russian man found me. I was almost dying," she said. "He was very good to me. He was hungry himself, but he fed me."

"A Russian found me too," said a child with flaxen hair.

"And me," called others. The little girl with the old face pressed close to me with something like contentment on her anxious features. "I am not hungry now—and I am not afraid any more."

Woman Writer to Direct Book Bazaar for Radcliffe

By BETTY ALDEN.

Miss Helen Leah Reed, who is known not only in the social but the literary world as well, is chairman of a committee which is arranging for a Book Bazaar to be held next month in aid of the Radcliffe Colleges endowment fund.

This affair promises to be of particular interest to book-lovers, as there will be, besides a department of new books, one of autographed copies of books by Harvard professors, especially those who have taught at Radcliffe. Also, there will be many works by other American authors, autographed as far as possible.

Miss Reed who is a poet and writer of children's stories, is the sister of Mrs. Everett Morss of Commonwealth avenue and the aunt of Mrs. Andrew Fiske of Beacon street. The latter is also a Radcliffe "grad" and busy working for her Alma Mater.

Speaking of Radcliffe, there has been no end of activity among former students of the college across the Charles in behalf of the endowment fund. Mrs. Clement S. Morrison opened her estate at Wellesley Hills for the sale of market vegetables, jellies and preserves.

On Saturday was the well-remembered "country fair" held on Mrs. Clarence Houghton Esty's estate in Brookline for the joint benefit of Radcliffe and Vassar colleges, at which a neat little sum—over a thousand dollars, I believe—was realized from the affair. Not even the rain could mar the occasion, and when the weather man frowned his worst the resourceful Mrs. Esty had the entire equipment moved inside the house and everything went on as had been planned.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fiske with their two daughters, the Misses Cornelia and Rosanna Fiske, have returned to their home at No. 242 Commonwealth avenue after a three months' trip abroad.

Miss Frances Stebbens was the winner at the golf tournament held recently at the Brae Burn Country Club. Miss Stebbens is a prominent member of the Junior League and a graduate of the Winsor School. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Stebbens of Sargent street, Newton, and of Duxbury.

Mr. and Mrs. George Baty Blake of Longwood and Lenox have as their guests Miss Marion Penno and Miss Miriam T. Penno of Boston. The Blakes are making a prolonged stay at "Pine Needles," their Lenox estate.

Miss Caroline T. Lawrence and Miss Alison T. L. Houghton, who were in Boston and on the North Shore for several weeks, have returned to Stockbridge in the Berkshires for the Autumn season.

Miss Boardman is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin A. Boardman of Beacon street and the North Shore. She is a member of the Sewing Circle and the Vincent Club, and has been spending the Summer at Nahant.

RAISING MILLION FOR PALESTINE COLLEGE

New York, Sept. 22.—A committee of physicians interested in the work of the American Jewish Physicians' Committee, which is raising a fund of a million dollars to establish a Medical College as part of the Hebrew University in Palestine, met to devise ways and means for the Fall campaign. The Jewish Physicians' Committee was organized by Dr. Nathan Ratnoff, who conceived the idea of the medical department of the Hebrew University. The committee is collecting funds for the presentation of a medical college as a gift from American Jewish physicians to the students of their race in Southern and Central Europe. The money is being collected throughout the country.

CANADIANS CAPTURE EDGARTOWN FISHERMEN

Edgartown, Sept. 22.—Captain Robert L. Jackson of the fishing schooner Hazel L. Jackson is back here again, though minus a member of his crew and a dory that were seized by a Canadian cutter for violating the fishery law in fishing for swordfish inside the treadmary three mile limit.

When the vessel arrived here John H. Doyle, who manned the dory seized by the Canadians, was waiting on the dock to greet the crew of the vessel as they swung fast to the pier. He said that he had been released by the Canadian officials shortly after his arrest and had made the trip here by jail

IF YOU MUST HAVE AN OPERATION---TRY THE NEW JAZZ METHOD

YOU CAN'T KEEP A GOOD HORSE DOWN! When this blooded animal left the wire at the recent London race he had just one idea in mind, and that was to win. Although the jockey was thrown and unable to remount, the charger plunged on alone and raced home one of the winners. Disqualified. (U. & U.)

A SNAPPY GAR MENT for snappy weather! This full topcoat of Australian opposum looks costly, but it is really one of the least expensive and richest in the fur line and easily within reach of most pocketbooks. Fashioned from Paris model. An advance creation. (C & U.)

JOKING THE JOKERS! While snapping scenes on the beach the other day, this director and two bathing beauties found a bottle containing a message saying that three victims of a wrecked fishing schooner were washed ashore in a rocky cove. The company dropped work and after a rough trip of seven miles reached the cove at nightfall. They were greeted with a laugh from a party of small boys. (C. & U.)

FAIRBANKS FILM MAKES HISTORY, CRITIC SAYS

By FRED J. McISAAC.

To think that "The Three Musketeers" had been running in Boston ten days before I got around to see it! The truth is that this "Doug and Mary" pifflo made me think it was just one of those preposterous acrobatic comedies which make Douglas a million a year, but which are about as important contributions to dramatic literature as a Punch and Judy show.

Mr. Douglas Fairbanks, accept my profound apologies. You have produced a historical film of extraordinary merit and created a role which comes nearer the ideal D'Artagnan than any of the numerous dramatic Musketeers who have swaggered around in Dumas' masterpiece for the past fifty years.

"The Three Musketeers" at the Selwyn Theatre is one of the most engrossing entertainments I have ever seen. Dumas' novel was by far the greatest romance ever written. It was brimful of exciting and enthralling instances, of battle, murder and sudden death. Like all French novels it had its naughty side, so that most youngsters read it for the first time surreptitiously. D'Artagnan would never have been mistaken for a member of the Y. M. C. A., particularly when he met the ladies.

NO NEED OF PADDING.

In building a motion picture from the novel all the producer had to do was pick his plots. There never was the slightest need for padding, stupid closeups and dull time killing conversation scenes.

"The Three Musketeers" begins with a biff and ends with a bang. Among the hundred thousand simpletons who journeyed to Jersey to see the Carpentier-Dempsey fight was yours very truly. Why you can step in anywhere in "The Three Musketeers" and see more fighting in a minute than occurred in that prize fight in the whole four rounds.

In our Civil War there was a pugnacious general named Phil Kearney. A colonel leading his regiment into battle saluted the general and asked where he should go in.

"Oh, anywhere, colonel," replied the Irish general. "There's elegant fighting along the whole line."

FULL OF BATTERING.

You never saw such battering and banging in your life. The press agent assures me there are fourteen desperate duels. I think he must have counted only those which resulted fatally, there are at least forty others.

But the swordplay of "The Three Musketeers," must not cloud the fact that it is one of the most elaborate productions ever made in America. Not so long ago we saw "Deception," a German film depicting life in England in the days of the Tudors. From a strictly artistic standpoint it far surpassed most American films.

Now comes Douglas Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers" with a film which has recreated France in the days of Louis 13th. I am informed that the street scenes alone cost one hundred thousand dollars to construct. Obviously the most meticulous care was taken to preserve historical fidelity in costumes, properties, houses, palaces, castles, interiors and even exteriors.

When you recall that it is only a decade ago a film of the American Revolution was made in which Colonists in battle used Springfield repeating rifles, it must be admitted that the films have advanced a hundred years in ten to turn out a superb historical drama of this character.

In building the picture the presence in America of fifteen or twenty different boards of censors in as many States, not to mention the multitude of volunteer municipal censors had to be taken into consideration.

When Dumas wrote his novels he didn't consider the views of the American small town and village ministers and reformers. The careless sort of D'Artagnan whom Dumas had in mind wouldn't pass most of our boards of censors.

DO NOT AFFECT RUNS.

So Douglas Fairbanks is a sort of spotless D'Artagnan. He behaves towards Madame de Winter in the film with the utmost circumspection which any gentleman could upon to choke a lady into giving up a place, age she had hidden in her bosom might achieve.

The beautiful Constance in the novel was the wife of the lodging-house keeper. In order to make it proper for D'Artagnan to make love to her they made her a single girl.

But these are trifles which don't affect the really delightful story in the least. And Fairbanks is a most fascinating musketeer. His wiry figure has amazing agility. His extraordinary skill at swordplay, his fashion of walking roofirees and jumping over walls, and his actual dramatic gifts, which are by no means small, combine to please Old Alexandre Dumas' pere, would approve of Fairbanks.

The three musketeers in the film, Athos, Porthos and Aramis, are even more lay figures than they were in the novel, and all other members of the cast save Richelieu had so little to do that they are not important. But Nigel De Brulier, who played the cardinal, did it in a sly, fox-like manner, with little of the great dignity that the old churchman possessed.

OZAKI SAYS JAP LEADERS WOULD STAY ARMED

Have No Desire to Limit Armaments, Declares Foremost Progressive

Copyright, 1921, by International News Service.

Tokio, Sept. 22.—There is no desire or intention among the Japanese Cabinet and military officials to limit armaments in the Mikadoempire and any progress in that direction will have to be made at the Washington conference, Yukio Ozaki, Japan's veteran progressive, who led the fight in the Japanese Diet to inaugurate disarmament, told the International News Service in an exclusive interview today.

For forty years Ozaki has been in Japanese public life, having been a member of the first Diet of the empire, a minister of justice and for ten years mayor of Tokio.

President Harding, when he called the conference to discuss Far Eastern affairs and armament limitation unknowingly, but nevertheless surely, saved the Hara Cabinet from the fall which has threatened it for months, Ozaki, who was seen at his Summer home in the Japanese Alps at Karuizawa, declared.

OPPORTUNITY LOST

"President Harding brought the cabinet and empire into a conference of statesmen and the opposition party of Japan, which I had urged to fight for disarmament, lost the greatest opportunity it has had for the overthrow of a ministry," he added.

Ozaki said the Japanese delegation to Washington would be more influenced by the army and naval officials than by any disarmament sentiment at home or by any wish for world peace.

Japan, since the Chinese war, has been suffering "militarism," Ozaki said effectively. Many people still keep this system, and many of our people fathed in their opinions by such papers as the Kokumin and the Nancho, are imaginary enemies. A Japanese who urges his countrymen to see good in other nations is apt to be looked on with suspicion.

"I have no hope for disarmament in Japan unless the Washington conference is a success. If it is, Japan may be expected to follow the lead of America and Great Britain; if it is not, we Japanese progressives will fight for the principle, but it will be years before leaders here can meet with any success in the reduction of preparations for a war.

PERRY SUSPECTED.

"When Commodore Perry's mission came to Japan the feeling was that America intended to wrest the empire from the people. That feeling exists in a different sense today, due partly to alarmists, to the isolated condition of Japanese public opinion and to military success.

"The Japanese delegates to Washington will represent a ministry apparently willing to disarm, but nevertheless a ministry which but a few short months ago went on record as definitely opposing curtailment of disarmament measures.

"Baron Shidehara, Baron Hayashi and others on the delegation, as reported now to be probable members of it, are not men whose conscience is free, allowing them to act independently in behalf of the best interests of the world."

INDIANS IN FAREWELL GAME WITH RED SOX

By NICK FLATLEY

Final preparations for the big clash with the Yankees were made by the title-owning Indians today. They took on the Red Sox for the last time this season. After the game, the club goes to New York for four games that will just about decide where the A. L. half of the World's Series is to be staged.

If the Speaker outfit can subdue the Babe Ruths, enough momentum will be gained to carry the club through to the finish. If the Polo Grounders get the long end, New York will undoubtedly become the double baseball capital of the universe.

A win today is necessary for the champs to enter their crucial test on even terms with the Gotham pretenders. A defeat will give the hank bettermen an edge that should mean the glory. Neither club is as steady as a title squad should be, but that merely adds to the excitement.

Victory, however, is just as requisite for the Sox, who have ambitions to get somewhere in the race. They are back in the second division, but not so far but that a triumph will rocket them into the select class again.

Smoke is evidently saving Covaleskie for the New Yorkers, and anxious to do the same with Mails. Wherefore, he was likely to use Bathoron this P. M., and reserve his big birds, plus Bagby, for the week end.

The Texan, however, believes that a game won is a game won, no matter what the position, and was ready to hurl one of his aces in there if things got shaky.

Elmer Myers was the logical Sox choice, as Joseph Bush who has won nine in a row, was in need of a couple of days' rest. The Billiker is anxious to build up the string and may talk himself into a shot at Indians.

The Browns follow the Indians here, and play double headers tomorrow and Saturday. A single game was booked for the ultimate afternoon of the week, but the Monday pastime was moved ahead.

Evidently the Cleveland Indians are prepared to be left out in the cold. They played like the champions they are in the second game of the present series, on a chilly, dreary afternoon plentifully sprinkled with a hundred proof mist. They knocked the Red Sox back into fifth place, and, incidentally, clambered into another virtual tie with the reating Yankees for the lead.

The count of the contest was 6 to 1, which just about summed up the respective assaults of the contending outfits.

The Yankees are still in first place with a mark of .623571, the result of 90 wins and 52 losses, while the Indians rec-ster .622580 from 91 victories and 55 defeats. Staging to look as if the four game series between the two clubs, which starts tomorrow, would be the most important engagement that has swent down the line, in a very thrilling year.

Losing to the Indians dropped the Sox back into the second division as the Senators won, and passed ahead by t.e well known fractional margin. Third place is still in the offing, however, and the Duffys are not really worry at all about the Washington entry.

Pitching toppled the natives, the champ flingers showing a lot of stuff in spite of the icy breezes and several unseasonable weather conditions. Ray Caldwell, who started, was under a full head of steam when he was shunted out of the picture by Eddie Foster.

ARE YOU SUFFERING FROM NERVE FORCE EXHAUSTION?

How to Tell and What to Do.

Thousands are failures in life and a burden to themselves and families from depletion of the nervo-vital fluid.

All success and happiness in life depend upon the nervous system which consists of countless millions of cells. In these cells is stored the mighty mysterious energy which we call nerve force. When your nerve force becomes weakened or exhausted you may suffer from all kinds of alarming symptoms. The nervous woman of leisure feels bright and like herself during any exciting pleasure, yet every time she indulges in such, she is only further spending her already small supply of reserve force and further aggravating her already lamentable condition. Many such a woman has no exciting pleasures, she at once feels morbid and depressed, has headaches and a great weakness and moods in which she wants to scream.

The nervous man need not feel in a perpetual hurry. He is impatient and restless while waiting for his car or luncheon. He eats rapidly, bolts, and at night tosses and thinks for an hour or two before he can get to sleep. His memory fails, his judgment becomes poor and he often makes bad decisions, which greatly annoy him. At times rude his business. The nervous accident should occur and he is not prepared his situation often is at work. The nervous man is a nuisance to himself, forgets where he puts things and often cannot remember what he started to do. A sight like often has a "good cry" and excuses it by saying it is a relief for her nerves, when it is a sign that her nervous force is exhausted. Without nerve force you will power becomes weakened, you have no ambition, energy and courage to do and carry them through. The most hopeful sight in life is a man or woman who has the will" of all diseases, except insanity, there are few, if any, whose nervous is their nature than exhaustion of the nervous fluid. In such cases, 6 to 12 bottles of Nuxated Iron will make more stimulating medicine or tonic for the nerves, which only whip up your flagging vital powers for the moment, but leave you worse off than before. What you need is to put more nerve force into your nerves and more iron into your blood, to help make new nerve force with, which is food your starving nerve cells. This is most effectively accomplished by the free use of Nuxated Iron. This valuable product contains the principal chemical constituent of active living nerve force in a form which most nearly resembles that in the nerve and brain cells of man.

It also contains organic iron like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach lentils and apples. This form of iron will not blacken nor injure the teeth nor upset the stomach. It is an entirely different thing from metallic iron which people usually take. Nuxated Iron may therefore be termed both a blood and a nerve tonic, as it creates strength-giving iron in your and the principal chemical ingredient of active living nerve force in your brain and nerve cells. Over four million people are using Nuxated Iron annually, and from the remarkable beneficial results which it has produced, the manufacturers feel so certain of its efficacy, that they guarantee satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. Beware of substitutes, look for the word "Nuxated" on every package.

MEDFORD PLAYS LAWRENCE IN PRACTICE

Coach Mansfield's Eleven Does Not Fear Team From Merrimac Valley

By Fred C. Lane.

The axe wielding program at Medford has reduced the squad of ninety candidates, who reported early last week to an ordinary sized but formidable football team. When Coach Mansfield issued the call for candidates he was swamped with material. The team will brush up for a practice trial with Lawrence High, which will come to these parts with some reputation. The boosting, on the part of the Lawrence rooters, has caused little or no concern, however, to the Medford lads, who are waiting for the whistle of the referee to start the way to a memorable record this Fall.

After yesterday's workout it looks very much as though the line-up that will face the Lawrence team will be: Ends, Lindin, Tackle, Foss. Guard Gillis, centre, Keayhein Guard Dempsey, tackle; McDonald, end, Adams, quarter-back; McNulty, left halfback; Leary, fullback, and Nichols right halfback.

The Lynn English-Chelsea High game scheduled for Friday, at Everett High field, will give the coaches of both elevens a fine chance to see the quality of the new material.

The Shoe City team is favored to win in a walkaway, but Coach Sumner Davis, who has revivified Chelsea football team after four years of inactivity, promises to surprise Lynn.

A successful year is all that is wanted to put the team on a paying basis and it is the hope of the school authorities to start the plans for building up an enclosed field soon. As it now stands the team is without proper place for home games, so all the contests must be played away from home.

As is customary at Salem, the high school will again be represented with a heavy team and Coach Harry McDevitt has been working overtime rounding the eleven into shape for a strenuous campaign. Salem took up football after a three-year layoff and has done well. The expenses for outfitting the team and to pay for a new athletic field was wiped out in one successful season.

STUDENTS OF FOOTBALL WATCH FISHER'S WORK

By CHARLES E. PARKER

What changes will Coach Fisher make in the Harvard attack this year?

Students of football, the majority of whom expect such changes, are asking this question, and on Saturday alert eyes will be focussed on the Crimson team to note any such new developments.

The writer some time ago suggested the possibility of Harvard's more in a recent article, appears to share the opinion of the Crimson forward pass and Coach Roper of Princeton, this view.

Other developments also seem to be in order, for the record of the Harvard attack, which has been varied but slightly in the past decade, has been growing less and less impressive.

It will be recalled that forward passes alone enabled Harvard to tie Princeton in the past two years, and it will be recalled that neither forward passes nor rushes could produce a touchdown in the last Harvard-Yale contest.

There are three possible conclusions for this lessening in the effectiveness of the Crimson attack. One is that the men who have made up the Crimson teams of the past season or two were less capable than their predecessors.

Another is that Harvard's opponents have fathomed the earlier mystery of the Crimson attack and are coached to effectively check it. And the third possible, and, most likely, the probable conclusion is a combination of the two.

And any of the three would seem to demand the introduction of new plays.

It is much too early to estimate the quality of Harvard's material, for men who fail to impress in preliminary practice often develop into wonder players as the season progresses, and some who are hailed as stars when first report, flicker out before the season is well along.

The general impression, however, is that the Crimson squad of this Fall lacks slightly, at least, the quality of last year's squad, and lacks considerably the quality of the squads of 1915 and the years immediately before.

And if such is the case plays that will compensate for this lesser ability would be in order.

It has been the boast of some Harvard men that although the Crimson's opponents knew what the Harvard team does, they do not know when they do it.

In other words, that while Harvard opponents may have learned the Harvard plays, the deception employed by the Crimson in working such plays prevents opponents from cashing on their knowledge.

Until recently, this has appeared to be the case. Of late, however, each man opposing Harvard's attack has been given a definite assignment, and when these assignments have been carried out the deceptive element in Harvard's attack has gone for naught.

Consequently it is reasonable to suppose that still greater emphasis will be placed on the latter department this Fall by all Harvard opponents, and, again the necessity of new plays on Harvard's part is indicated.

It is doubtful however, if such new plays make their appearance until well along in the season. The calibre of Harvard's early season opponents, with the exception of Holy Cross, probably will not prove as high as many have been led to suppose, and in the case of Holy Cross, Harvard will enjoy a tremendous weight advantage, which should serve the Crimson in good stead, and Harvard also is likely to adopt the tactics of holding the ball, thereby limiting the Purple's chances of becoming dangerous.

Neither of Harvard's opening day, rivals, and again the necessity of possess the weight, strength, speed or skill to greatly annoy the Crimson Princeton, in next week's battle for possibilities, but Indiana and Penn State have been virtually stripped of their material, and Centre College has so much to learn about defensive football that it seems extremely doubtful if that knowledge is gained in time to apply it to the Crimson team.

Such being the aspect of the first four or five weeks of the Harvard schedule it will be possible for Harvard to withhold its new "stuff" until the season is well along, but that such "stuff" will appear is the confident expectation of all who closely follow the game, and so excellent has been the quality of Harvard's long standing plays that the probable new developments are awaited with the greatest of interest.

Yale's varsity squad contains by far the greatest number of ponderous athletes of any of our Eastern institutions, according to tables of weight recently received.

No less than eight of the line candidates up the scales at 200 pounds or upwards, and that Yale will carry a weight advantage in the line against all its opponents is almost certain.

"Pat" Herr, at 250 pounds, is Yale's bulkiest candidate; Harry Cross, at 234 is next in order; others of the elephantine group are Batty, 220 pounds; Mackay, 210; Cruickshank, 216; Into, 215; Qualle, 205, and Landis, 203.

Of this group probable first string players are Herr, Cross, Qualle and Into—the former pair as guards and the latter pair as tackles, which should give Yale an average weight of 226 pounds for the four positions.

Harvard's probable first string lineup shows two 200-pounders — Fiske Brown, 205, and Wesley Brocker, 200. Princeton and Mack, who weighs 220 this season, and expects to have McMahmon, who weighs 205. Dartmouth has not a single 200-pounder in her squad, although several closely approach that mark.

Incidentally, two of Dartmouth's heaviest men—Captain Jim Robertson 195, and George Murphy, 194—are leading backfield candidates, and the success of two such huskies in the backfield should furnish quite a problem for Dartmouth opponents this season.

Possible first string combinations appearing in the accompanying table show the weight of the men on these four teams.

"Gloomy Gil" Dobie of Cornell and John Heisman of Pennsylvania, each has a fairly liberal showing of veterans in the squads they are grooming for their respective opening games.

LISTON MAKES A TOUCHDOWN ON 50-YARD RUN

Boston College Left Halfback Goes Through Second Team for Score

Major Cavanaugh will announce the first big out in the Boston College squad at the close of practice today. As the large majority of the ninety candidates have been out since the first day of practice, Cavanaugh has had a good chance to size up the material, and will be set to shoot fifty men. This will leave the coach sufficient material to pick the first and second teams, with enough left over to use in case it is necessary.

The first team made up in hard work yesterday for the rest they enjoyed on Tuesday. Coach Joy again took charge of the squad, as Cavanaugh was absent on business. Under "Hiker's" orders, the regulars got little rest. Coach Joy believes in a good stiff workout or none at all.

Jimmy Liston, at left half, played a fine game. Early in the practice he broke through the second team line and ran fifty years for a touchdown. Liston promises to outshine Roderick, who played right half last season. Liston and Roderick were the two biggest point scorers for the Boston College team last Fall. He is an excellent broken field runner, and has speed enough to make him a dangerous opponent.

Hickey shared honors with Liston in their forward pass combination. Liston can shoot the ball as straight as an arrow and generally does it unerringly. The play Liston to Hickey, netted the first team two touchdowns.

Hickey has been playing end with the first team in the last few scrimmages. His work on the end is good and may win him the regular berth. Two other speedy men, Hughes, last year's hockey captain, and Walter Nolan, star track man, are contending for the position, and the fight has practically narrowed itself to a contest among these three men.

CHICAGO NEXT IN LINE FOR BRAVES DRIVE

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 22.—The final Western series for the Braves finds them behind third place. Fred Mitchell's Buck Bay entry left here for Chicago after a tussle with the Cards and while not erased officially as a contender for a split of the World Series shekels, nevertheless they realize that the handicap is almost too much to hurdle.

There is such a thing, of course, as open fire the Braves to dash down the stretch with nothing but victories and defeats for the Cardinals, whose remaining schedule shows three games with the Giants and five with the Pirates.

However, the most enthusiastic supporter of Fred Mitchell would not risk much more than a desire for the third place chances.

The Braves lost their big chance by splitting the series of two games with the Cardinals.

Branch Rickey's knot holers are adding thrills to the late days of the National League race. In the Mound City they are talking about the second place, passing the Pirates and adding further insult to Barney Dreyfuss' and finish.

All things considered, the Braves have been a sensation this season and Fred Mitchell is entitled to the Miracle Man class. He was short in his pitching staff and when one or two of his regulars temporarily collapsed under the strain he did not have the necessary surplus strength.

At that the development of his pitching staff has been phenomenal. Further, he has lured out a new infield star in Norman Ford, and the departure of Rabbit Maranville did not leave the gap that was expected.

The Cardinals gave the Braves a stubborn tussle in finishing the series and tied the score although the Braves opened with five runs by chasing Walker and Bailey in the first inning.

They returned with four in their half. Nicholson hit over the left field fence in the second, increasing the margin to two, but in the fifth a single by Stock, a double by Mueller and single by McHenry tied it. The winning run came in the ninth on doubles by Nicholson and Cruise.

SIEGFRIED MAKES RUN HALF LENGTH OF FIELD

Hanover, N. H., Sept. 22.—Dartmouth's final scrimmage before the Norwich game was held yesterday. Teams A and B were sent through the longest scrimmage of the year, a hard battle which lasted for about half an hour.

Long runs by Siegfried and Robertson were the features of the play. Siegfried received the opening kick off on his own goal line and ran through nearly all the second team before being downed in midfield. Robertson made his run on the next play when he slid off tackle.

The first team lost its chance to score when a forward pass over the goal line was incompleted

WATCHING THE BALL AND TIMING SHOTS
A B C OF GOLF

By JOCK HUTCHINSON

There are two very important things to be remembered in the golf swing. One without the other will not amount to much so I mention them together and insist that my readers and pupils never swing at a golf ball without keeping both in mind.

One is the follow through, the other is permitting the club head to come onto the ball before any movement forward has been made with the body.

These are simple things to know and simple to do, yet the golfer is prone to err more in these two vital things than in any other feature of the game.

It matters little what one does in the golf swing, whether it be a full or a three-quarter swing, whether the stance or the grip is correct or whether other details are right or wrong as long as one accomplishes these two things, a good shot is likely to result.

These two points are first to be taken into consideration in any golf instruction. They should be made as plain as A B C to the pupil and put into his head, and then we let the clubhead continue on in a straight line after the ball is hit, is now known as the follow through. I think these two fundamentals can be learned best with a putter.

Put a ball on the ground and stand over it with a putter. Do not attempt to hit the ball any distance but what distance you do intend to go. Try to send it on a straight line. Draw back the club and then hit the ball cleanly with the clubhead without moving your body forward in the least degree. When you hit the ball do not stop the club, but let it go on through.

This is the golf stroke. After this becomes habit, apply the same theory to the drive and the iron shots. Naturally it will be done in a different way, but bear this idea in mind that the ball must be hit first with the club and that the club must go through.

The follow through has been written about a great deal in golf. It has been said that a ball hit by a long driver will stay on the face of the club for several inches.

As no one has been able to photograph this successfully, the actual distance that the two are together can not be determined.

In the case of some players it might be as much as eight or ten inches. The ball hit, or swept away by the fast moving clubhead, first flattens out on the surface of the club to almost three-fourths of its diameter.

It must then rebound from the club. The longer the follow through (more control) one will have over the ball and the longer it might will be.

Waiting for the clubhead to come onto the ball has been described as the proper timing of the shot. Most golfers will know it by this name. Harry Vardon described the timing exactly when he used the expression, 'the weight follows the club.'

In timing the shot, several things are taken into consideration. There is the transference of the weight, the return of the left heel to the ground at the moment of he impact, hitting the ball exactly in the centre of the club and other details.

To accomplish all of this one must have perfect physical balance. The clubhead starts down toward the ball, gradually increasing its speed until it is at its greatest when the ball is reached or a few inches afterward.

Any attempt to hurry the club at the top of the swing is all lost action.

The duffer or the beginner has a most difficult task in waiting for that clubhead to come in contact with his little white before trying to help matters along with a body movement or in an attempt to thrust the arms forward.

No one can make any progress without practice and concentration. One can make up for the lack of a gift in natural balance by study and practice. The old idea that practice makes perfect applies to golf more than to any game I know of.

When there is no proper timing of the shot and no follow through the result is almost invariably a slice, the greatest enemy of the duffer.

To perfect the proper timing and then fail to follow through is the cause of all sorts of trouble, but it is principally in direction that the shot suffers when the club is not permitted to complete the stroke.

There is a noticeable difference in golfing styles among the leading stars of the game, but they all are in practically the same position when the ball is hit, which means that all pros and all high class amateurs agree that the only proper way to hit the ball is with perfect timing and a follow through.

It is this that has left me to believe that these two things are the most important to be considered in learning the game.

There is Vardon with his perfect swing often referred to as a golf poem, Big Ted Ray with his tremendous swipe at the ball and long swing, Abe Mitchell and J. H. Taylor with their short compact swings. George Duncan with his lightning like motion and Alex Smith with his sway, all obtaining the same results because of the proper timing.

Long Jim Parnes does not drive the same as Walter Hazen or myself, Hazen and I have styles that are not similar yet we all agree on the important point in discussion.

One should be in exactly the same position when the ball is hit as he was in when addressing it. So it is necessary to pay close attention to the address in order to improving the timing. Don't stand too far away from the ball as if you were afraid of it.

Don't on the other hand, get too close. One can gauge this by the way he wants the club to hit the ball.

MEDBURY

Says a Rabbit's Foot Is Good Luck for Everybody Except the Rabbitt

Superstitution is a terrible thing, but some people are not superstitious as long as they've got a rabbit's foot with them

A rabbit's foot may prevent bad luck, but the rabbit you get it from wore four of them, and all of them didn't save him.

Some people are superstitious about lighting three cigarettes on one match. With the country dry you sell you nowadays, it's hard to light one cigarette.

If you've got matches you haven't got cigarettes, and if you've got cigarettes you haven't got matches, and by the time you get both of them together you haven't got the habit.

A four leg clover is supposed to be good luck, a guy found one once, but while he was finding it he got his foot wet, caught pneumonia and died.

It's bad luck to break a plate glass mirror, especially if the owner catches you

Every time you break a mirror you get seven years' bad luck. Some guys must have been doing nothing but breaking mirrors all their lives.

It's also considered bad luck to stand in back of a mule. It's not only considered bad luck, it's considered bad judgement.

If you get a horseshoe it's good luck, but not if the horses foot is attached to it.

If he falls it's good luck.. Not for him but for the doctor.

We're supposed to be intelligent and we're superstitious, but the cat isn't afraid at all.

Whenever you go back to a room, always sit down and count ten. You're out of luck if you can't count that high and there's no chair in the room.

You're always safe if you carry a lucky coin in your pocket. Still, one guy carried one and tried to pass it for a fifty-cent piece and was sent to jail for ten years.

This coin brought him luck, if he hadn't had it he might have been hanged.

BRITT SIGNED TO BATTLE KANSAS AT ARENA

By JACK CONWAY.

Frankie (Young) Britt, who stoutly maintains he is the noble boss of the New England lightweights, has been signed to meet Rocky Kansas in a ten round bout at the Arena A. C.

Britt, going on the high note he believes he will be able to trounce Kansas. The New Bedford warrior recently knocked out Jimmy Frusetti and then bested Young Bandini.

Right now Kansas is one of the biggest moneymakers in the lightweight classes. He defeated Lee of fame when he kayoed Ritchie Mitchell and then stepped forth and gave Benny Leonard a tough battle

As for Britt, he always seemed to have a little something on Willie Jackson and Kansas. Johnny Dundee always could beat Britt but it was a different story when Dundee was opposed by Jackson or Kansas.

We remember that one evening after Britt had handed Kansas a thumping in this city, the Buffalo warrior walked into the office of the Armory Club and announced he was through with the boxing game. Rocky, however, did not keep his word. Instead he stepped forth and reaped a golden harvest.

Maybe Britt still has the Indian sign on the fighter from Buffalo.

Lou Bogash is in Boston ready for his battle with Joe Eagan, which will be staged at Mechanics Building tomorrow night under the direction of the Commercial A. C. Bogash says he is fit and that he will win inside of the limit

The Bridgeport man has a big task on his hands as Eagan usually fights like a champion when he starts one of his come-back surges. After looking over the crop of middleweights that are now getting big money for their services, Dorchester Joseph decided it was time for him to step forth and fight as he is capable of doing

Patsy Bogash, a brother of Lou, will oppose Woonsocket Joe Gibbs in another ten-session affair Harney Rivers of Woonsocket and Billy Gustin of South Boston are also down to travel ten rounds, while Johnny Shepard of Woburn and Young Donahue of the South End are billed for eight frames

Reservations may be secured at Room 12, No. 28 School street.

Eddie Mack's stable of boxers are ready for a busy Fall and Winter campaign. Abe Friedman, New England bantamweight champion, is training at Lowell for bouts with the best men in his division. Johnny Clinton is open to meet the best of the lightweights, while Jack Savage would like to get a match with Hambone Kelly. Mack points to the fact that Savage upset Nixie Scarlen when that worthy was being handed a deck of setups. He is now ready to hand out similar treatment to the Hambone person.

One of the largest crowds to see a boxing match in New England this year will be on hand when Nate Siegal and Eddie Shevlin meet at Mechanics Building next Tuesday night under the direction of the Armory A. A. The fact that these boys were recently prevented from meeting at Revere by the boxing commission has added to the interest in the match. Then, too, Siegal's stock took a big boom as a result of his bang-up showing against Mike Morley. The decision went to Morley, but 90 per cent of the fans, as well as every boxing writer in Boston, declared that Siegal won the fight.

Shevlin will probably enter the ring a 10-to-7 or 10-to-6 favorite, but there is sure to be a great deal of Siegal money on hand at post time.

Water Stars to Meet

New York, Sept. 22.—Norman Ross, called the world's champion all-around swimmer, will meet Henry Giebel of the New York Athletic Club in a match race at 440 yards here Sunday.

BLACK-BALLED PLAYERS MAY START ROW

Many Major Leaguers Sign to Play on Teams Where Outlaws Star

A score or more of major league ball players are planning to play ball next winter, it appears, and are making no plans to go to California.

Some of the biggest stars in the sport are engaged to play or manage in the California Winter league.

This far there seems to be no opposition to the thing The players and managers are going right ahead making their plans.

One California paper says that Buck Weaver and Swede Risberg will play in the league.

This is not confirmed, but it is interesting to know what the players of organized ball will do if they are called upon to meet those fellows outside the pale of organized baseball

And what will organized baseball do if the players who are signed or reserved by them see fit to play against those against whom the ban has been raised?

SYRACUSE TO TRY NEW PLAYS AGAINST HOBART

Syracuse, Sept. 22. — That the Syracuse eleven will be in good condition for its opening game of the season with Hobart in the big Archbold Stadium here next Saturday is probable, as only Benny Moses, the sterling quarterback, is not in the best of physical condition just now. He has been suffering from an injured ankle, but is likely to be in such shape that he can be pressed into service Saturday if it is necessary for Coach John F. ("Chick") Meehan to use him.

Only straight football will probably be used against Hobart although one or two of the new plays which have been tried out daily behind closed gates may be used just to see with what degree of success the men can handle them.

CAMBRIDGE RUNNER SETS NEW 500-METRE MARK

Stockholm, Sept. 22.—H. D. Mountaineer, Cambridge University runner, today, at an athletic meeting, won the 800-metres race in one minute and one-fifteenth of a second. It is claimed that this is a world's record.

The world's record for 800 metres previously was held by F. Haja, of Hungary, who made the distance in one minute seven and six-tenths seconds, in 1913.

JONES, EVANS, GUILFORD, HUNTER AND KNEPPER AMONG WINNERS

By FRANCIS OUIMET

Clayton, Mo., Sept. 22.—Grand golfers will be forced to make their exit from the national amateur championship today and tomorrow, for only players of that calibre are left in the competition. That, is as it should be

There are some who are constantly trying to figure out, and to claim, that the current of events is bringing a lot of the second and ancient game

Some of the biggest stars line the sport are engaged to play or manage in the California Winter league.

This far there seems to be no opposition to the thing The players and managers are going right ahead making their plans.

One California paper says that Buck Weaver and Swede Risberg will play in the league.

This is not confirmed, but it is interesting to know what the players of organized ball will do if they are called upon to meet those fellows outside the pale of organized baseball but results in the national championships generally say otherwise, and surely have this year at the St Louis Country Club, for there is no man left in the contending ranks who would not make a worthy champion played on a testing course.

Only one of the British entrants, Hunter is still in but he is their amateur champion, and as long as he remains there will be the international factor to fight.

He lost his British compatriot yesterday, when Thomas D. Armour went down before Robert A. Gardner, but Armour at least has the consolation of knowing that it took a two-times winner of the title to bring about his defeat.

He was a dangerous factor, as far as foreign competition for the title is concerned, but there is left, Hunter, who has many of the characteristics of Harold Hilton, who came very in 1911 and, without the support of any countryman, walked away with the big prize.

Hunter is a cool proposition, a fighter, one of the kind who is ever on hand to take advantage of another man's slips and who does not slip a whole lot himself. He may not be as brilliant as Cyril J. M. Tolley, last year's British amateur champion, but there was a significance about the way he held himself in hand yesterday afternoon and finally pulled out over that fine St Louis representative, James Manion.

There was a fighting finish, if ever there was one, contrasting to the Armour-Gardner match because in theirs Armour had somewhat the same kind of a collapse on the putting green. The first hole of the afternoon, as I had the last nine against Harrison R. Johnston.

It is true that Gardner plays well, he demolished it in 4 to the turn, but that ought not to have been good enough to win him four holes of the nine, and put him 3 up where he had been 2 down starting the afternoon The finish came at the fifteenth, or

Arthur Stringer's Studio Romance THE WINE OF LIFE Illustrated by James Montgomery Flagg

A Stirring Narrative of the Influence of Love on the Lives of a Girl and a Man

The Action So Far.

Owen Storrow, a young sculptor, coming to New York to perfect himself in his art, meets Torrie Throssel, a strikingly lovely girl, under unusual circumstances, and she falls in love with him. Storrow goes to the luxurious home of his step-aunt, who has offered him a studio there. He meets Charlotte Kirkner, his cousin, whom he saves from drowning and who tells him she loves him. Storrow leaves his aunt's home, takes a studio in New York and discovers Torrie next door. He finds himself more and more in love with Torrie, who has been cast for a part in a play under the direction of Herman Krassler, who sees in her great promise. Storrow, under pressure of peculiar circumstances, tells the police that Torrie is Mrs. Storrow.

"MOTHER is not at all well," ran the note, "and is anxious to see you. We've had to give up all thought of going South. Would it be too much to ask you to run out tonight with Munsell? It may be important."

Storrow put the note back in its envelope and crossed to the window. He stared out over the serrated skyline of housetops where a faint gray in the sky showed the earliest light of morning. The night was already over. Storrow pushed the note down in his dressing gown pocket.

"You're not going to leave me?" asked a drowsily-cadenced voice out of the heavier darkness of the room behind him.

Slowly Storrow turned and crossed to the Russian bed. He reached the wing-chair and sank down in it. As he did so a hand was thrust into his, a warm hand, softly cushioned about the thumb-joint, passive only in its motionlessness. He held it, silent and thoughtful, as he sat there waiting for the daylight.

It was the following afternoon that Storrow, in answer to Charlotte's message, made his way over to Brooklyn. He waited till at last in the huge library of the Kirkner home. It was Medwery, as immobile as ever, who brought a somewhat tardy message down to him. Mrs. Kirkner had taken a turn for the better. But the doctor had given orders that she was not to be disturbed.

Storrow, weighted down by a sense of estrangement, asked if he could possibly see Charlotte. Miss Kirkner, he was told, was not at home. But Medwery would see to it that any message which might be left would reach her on her return.

Storrow, beyond an expression of conventional regrets, knew of no message, and with no ponderable lessening of restraint took his departure. Two days later he received a short note from Charlotte explaining that her mother had so greatly improved that she would be taken South as soon as she could be safely moved. She hoped Owen would have a happy and successful Winter. It struck Storrow as odd that the expression of a hope so benignant should carry with it so keen a barb of discomfiture to its recipient.

"Awful!" shouted a man's voice when the agony had come to an end. "Simply awful!"

"Then why can't you let me do it my own way?" demanded the tearful voice of a woman.

"That's just what's the matter. You haven't got any way. If you'd pull a few realhers from the wings of your imagination and glitch them in the tail of your judgment, you might get somewhere."

"Then stop criticising me!"

"I ridicule you as long as you don't do things right. I'm the big ki-ky of this kennel, and you're going to do what I say."

"If you're claiming to be a dog, I agree with you," was the impassioned retort.

"Then we'll let it go at that and get a little of that pep, please, for professional purposes!"

It was the labor-pains of Art, and the olive-skinned Hebrew known as Herman Krassler come to coach Torrie Throssel in her new part. He had worked with her an hour, at first quietly and patiently, then excited and explosively, before Storrow in the next room fully understood what was taking place. He realized, during what became an incredibly noisy scene, that the fiery-hearted little man of the stage was putting forth every effort to impart fire to the protean and somewhat bewildered girl confronting him. It was an emotional "bit" apparently, and the novice was neither sure of her way nor fully conscious of what was expected of her Drawn by James Montgomery Flagg.

"Don't beat your chest like a baboon," screamed Krassler to the rehearsal-weary Torrie, "they canned that twenty years ago."

'Now, try that again, and for the love of God get a little life into it!" Storrow could hear her all but exasperated coach demand.

"I tell you, Hermie, I can't! I can't do it!" was the almost sullen protest of the girl in a voice already heavy with fatigue.

"You've got to," commanded the other. And he proceeded to goad and taunt her into renewed action. Storrow could hear her into position again and again as a rider urges a spirited hunter up to an exceptionally hazardous jump.

Storrow resented that arbitrary assumption of control over the mind and body of the girl. He began to comprehend what was taking place on the other side of the lobby. Torrie was in a position, for the moment at least, of that quicker will over the less adroit will of his pupil. Krassler was trying to empty a human body of its own personality and thrust an altogether different one, a make-believe one, into its place. He was taking possession of her, manipulating her reassembling her to suit his own ends.

Not for Nothing

"Not for Nothing" shouted Krassler, to the weary Torrie. "Quit whine like that! That's your big line and you've got to get some heart-break into it. Don't sing like a sick parrot. Feel it, woman, feel it!"

"I can't feel it. It's a fool of a line, and you know it!"

"It's certainly a fool of a line when you read it that way," was the other impassioned retort. "Any line would be. But the line's there, and you've got to squeeze the last drop of life out of it. That's what God gave you a brain for. Now go back and try it again. And don't swallow your voice as though you had a hot potato against your tonsils. Throw it out—straight out in front of you. Throw it out so it'll hit eight hundred people flat in the face."

"Don't Whine"

It was tried again, and Krassler groaned aloud. Then still again came explanation, expostulation, the flicks of mockery, the high-pitched curt commands. And again a voice which did not seem Torrie's voice pleaded and shook with its facitious emotion, rose and fell with its waves of purely imaginary woe, choked in a fraudulently achieved imitation of a sob.

"You're getting it, girl; you're getting it," cried the excited voice of Krassler. "Now keep on and go through the whole scene

Drop your voice on that, and don't m— until you come to the words I never knew you never knew

Keep your spine stiff. No, no, you can't beat your chest—that's a baboon. Retreat! Retreat under the circumstances was impossible.

And since he could not go back, since what had been done had been done, he must now push through to the end of the tunnel. What he had taken must be made endless and unquestionably his own. It would surely be a clarifying of the situation, he felt, that ... ishment of proprietorship.

It would make things right to ear— it would materialise what otherwise might stand over-romantic and over-exciting. It would do away with those too disturbing accidental meetings which were becoming more frequent now as storms and tempests have a habit to be remembered. harassed by this professional exploitor of emotion. It seemed to involve the submergence of her own individuality.

He paced his room, trying to think the thing out, trying to persuade himself that it was something more than sheer physical jealousy. His heart was still a parliament of, these silent debates, voices when he heard Krassler saying good-night to Torrie.

It was not Krassler the impresario but Krassler the man who spoke now, cordially and a little wearily, as he laughingly complained that even on Broadway you have to break your eggs before you can make your omelette. At almost the same moment, in the contentious forum of his own soul, Storrow suddenly perceived that there was only one way out for him.

Torrie would have to marry him.

Up to that time indeed he had given scant thought to marriage as marriage. He had been played on but lightly by the forces about him and the established covenant of mating seemed to him as essentially a social ceremony

Desire to Be Honest

He nursed a natural enough desire to be honest and alone honest in the human relationships. But there was a more personal aspect of the situation. He was already in a position from which he could not extricate himself, a position in which he found no wish to extricate himself. Retreat under the circumstances was impossible.

And since he could not go back, since what had been done had been done, he must now push through to the end of the tunnel. What he had taken must be made endless and unquestionably his own. It would surely be a clarifying of the situation, he felt, that ... ishment of proprietorship.

ADVICE TO LOVELORN

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Safe and Sane

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

A dear girl friend of mine married a young man from my office. Owing to our great friendship before her marriage, I have found great pleasure in visiting them.

Some time later they moved into my neighborhood and I saw the young man every day on the subway coming to work and going home.

The girls at the office, not knowing anything of my friendship with his wife, started unpleasant talk, but his wife told me it was all right, I continued doing the same thing.

Several weeks ago he sent his wife out West for a year's vacation and I told him that while she was away he will have to travel alone. But he has insisted upon my companionship. I refused, and we are no longer friends.

D.

YOUR stand may be priggish, according to modern views, but I think it was safe and sane. Why a man's wife should leave him for a year's "vacation" is a little hard to see. That in itself is bound to give rise to comment and may even be a factor in making each of them look elsewhere for interest and inspiration. For you to go about with this man would not only cause unpleasant talk which would do you no good, but it might even have the effect propinquity is so likely to produce.

Let Time Decide

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

About six months ago I met a young man. He took me home and proposed to me that very night and claimed it was "love at first sight" on his part. I love him, but my parents object. He is going away and wants my answer

LORRAINE

SINCE the young man is going away there isn't any need of immediate action. Persuade him that the thing for him to do is to convince your people by his sincerity and devotion that they aren't being fair in passing him on one or two pieces of evidence. Time will give you the opportunity to win them over to a belief in your love—if it proves lasting

Her Own Way, Story of a Young Girl's Struggles

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

Copyright, 1921, Star Company

NOW, however—with her heart hot within her at learning that after all Tom Andrews had not sent her any reminder of his interest in her—she did not care if she did wound the man who had revealed the truth to her

Her heart was sore. She had a savage desire to vent her misery upon some one. And the man who had sent her the roses, which she would rather have received from another man, seemed the logical victim

So, with a determined expression of countenance, she hurried downstairs, nor did she pause until she reached the entrance of Mrs. Ovington's small and dreary reception room.

A huge waste basket stood here. In this the lodgers were wont to drop envelopes of the letters and wrappers of the magazines that came in the mail deposited on the hall table.

The bright electric chandelier was directly over her head. A glance into the reception room showed her her cousin standing where he could see her

Bending down, she thrust the bunch of roses deep into the waste basket, pushing them down hard.

Into Huge Waste Basket

Then she straightened herself up and stood still long enough to wipe the moisture from her fingers with her handkerchief

She felt that she had been guilty of a childish action, prompted by pique and disappointment. It was too late now to undo it

Perhaps the knowledge of her childishness made her demeanor a little less aggressive than it had been a few minutes before She went forward to the man, who stood watching her.

"Won't you sit down?" he suggested courteously

She sat down without a word. He drew a chair opposite hers.

"First of all," he began, "I want to tell you that it was unnecessary for you to return that money to me. I wish you had not done so."

"I could hardly be under obligations to a complete stranger," she said sharply.

He bowed as if submitting to a decree. "I am sorry that you feel like that about it. I was in hopes that you might be reconciled to the fact that we are cousins."

A new note in the voice of the speaker made Helen study him more closely than she had done before

She noted that the fancied resemblance to her uncle was evident only in standing and walking. In sitting, this Daniel Sloane did not look at all like the man whose name he bore

He was attractive, too, in a peculiar kind of way

His black eyes were soft though restless, and he smiled frequently, showing flashing teeth. His manner was suave, his voice low and gentle

Helen understood as she watched him, why her landlady had found him charming

"Yes," he was saying, "I wish that it meant as much to you to have found a cousin as it means to me

"For I have been very lonely, my dear—very lonely and very much misunderstood."

He paused, but she did not speak

"I wonder," he resumed tentatively, "if you would try to listen to something I wish to explain?"

A Gentle Rebuke

"I do not know what Uncle Dan—bless his heart—told you of me. You spoke of some information he gave you. If it is what I suppose, perhaps I can persuade you that he was mistaken. But that was not his fault. He believed that he was doing his duty."

A swift sense of justice roused the girl to reply

"His duty?" she repeated sharply. "Yes, he certainly did believe that he was doing his duty in paying back the money that his nephew had—taken."

"The money he thought his nephew had taken," the genial tones corrected.

"What do you mean?" she asked

"I cannot explain it all, he said "There are others to be considered—others who are innocent Yet—"

Again he paused

"Well?" she asked

He went on. "You do not know —and never will know—the person who was implicated in this affair But, Helen—it was not I.

"You mean," she demanded, sitting up very straight and gazing into his eyes—"you mean that you did not take the money that Uncle Dan paid back?"

Never Tell

"I mean just that. I will never tell Uncle Dan that—for he is the sort of man who would insist upon the facts. And—for the sake of a poor little woman and her child—I must hold my tongue.

"It is bad enough for a woman to have been deserted by her husband without having the world know that he was a thief."

"A thief should be brought to justice."

She heard herself breaking the silence that followed his words. Her head was whirling. It was almost as if she were being hypnotized.

She could not believe that this man was a thief while she listened to him. Yet Uncle Dan had said—

"He has been brought to justice," her companion told her gravely.

"What do you mean?"

"Who?"

The man who took the money that Uncle Dan paid back—the man whose wife loved and trusted him—and who deserted her like a miserable coward

Helen pressed her hands to her eyes

"But I do not understand!" she exclaimed. "Please begin at the beginning and tell me about it!"

He thanked her gravely and gently for giving him the opportunity to set himself right with her. He knew he could trust her to keep his confidence

She was the only relative he had in the world now except his uncle. And his uncle must never know

Supposed Him Guilty

Then he told her the story of the friend, whom he had loved—the friend who had been like a brother to him

The two men had been employed by the same firm in a Western town. The night that Sloane left for a two weeks' vacation a sum of money was missing. It was suggested to Sloane's friend (who, for the sake of lucidity and to save confusion the narrator designated as John Smith) that Sloane had taken the money. Smith admitted his fear that this was true—that the absent employe had yielded to temptation

Sloane's employer, who knew Daniel Sloane, Sr., wrote to that gentleman. The uncle wired back the sum that had been stolen with the request that his nephew be allowed to go free

All this John Smith had confessed by letter to young Sloane while the latter was at the East Smith knew he could trust Sloane not to betray him. Now Smith had a lovely wife whom Dan had once loved—a girl who had discarded him for Smith

"You see," the narrator continued, "my lips are sealed. I have never gone—and can never go back— to the town where my name has been discarded."

THE RHYMING OPTIMIST

By ALINE MICHAELIS

ABOUT the time we fought the foe our soldier-boys were in Verdun, how their simple job is done we look on them as heroes. Said we, "We'll stay and do a chores right here in Goshen, while you protect our country's shores across the bounding ocean. We know your task is pretty bad, to serve as cannon-fodder; but you are not the sort of lads to flinch, shirk and dodder." We patted them upon the back, we sent them off with weeping; but now that times are slightly slack our gratitude is sleeping. Forgotten are those days and nights when forces clashed in battle, when mid unearthly sounds and sights, men died like slaughtered cattle. Forgotten

FINANCE AND BUSINESS

By S. C. FORBES

Even a donkey knows enough to increase the keenness of its search when the grass in its field affords poor pickings. Many business men and concerns have had less sense than donkeys during the last twelve months.

* * *

One very large American organization has succeeded in doing a wonderful amount of business all through the period of depression, notwithstanding that its chief problem is a selling rather than a producing one. How has it done it?

* * *

The other day this company held a convention in New York of all its local and nearby salesmen. I attended, for I was curious to learn the details of how business had been maintained so remarkably. I discovered that similar conventions are being held all over this country and in Canada. The executives have split into two groups, one to conduct conventions over one-half the country, and the other throughout the remaining territory.

How much do you think is being spent with holding the series of conventions?

Fifty thousand dollars? No. A hundred thousand dollars? No. The total cost will exceed $150,000.

With the company's orders coming back and more in the form of additional sales and additional profits? It knows that it shall.

The proceedings started quite early in the morning after a brief greeting from the district sales manager, the salesmen were treated to a comprehensive series of posters and diagrams showing the records which have been made by various concerns during the supposedly dull times. Great gains had been taken to gather inspiring facts and figures —some of the material was gathered from this column. As one striking achievement after another was flashed before the salesmen, the impression made upon them was unmistakable.

The question was then fired at them: "If these other companies can make such records, are we going to admit that we aren't as live wires as they are? The salesmen accepted the challenge with a whoop.

* * *

3—Railroads are placing large orders for repair work—other buildings will warrant necessary improvements.

4—Interest rates are declining.

5—An ample supply of credit is becoming available for all sound commercial uses.

10—Many industries which were dull a year ago show much improvement, among them shoe factories, textile mills and cotton goods mills.

A recent incident correctly reflects the spirit animating this wide organization—it is the National Cash Register Company. A national periodical sent an experienced writer to visit different large plants to find out how soon they figured on getting back to a normal working basis. As Dayton is the home location of the general manager, "How soon do you think you will get back to normal?"

"Normal h——l," exclaimed General Manager Barringer, "we've never gone back to normal, and here don't believe in going back. We believe in going forward. We've been able to do better than 'normal' right along, and we're going to continue doing better than normal."

Incidentally, in addition to keeping its sales forces tuned up to the top notch the company has advertised right along, has reduced prices and has worked more intently and intensively than ever before.

Learning that another nationally known company has been able to maintain a very large volume of sales right along, I endeavored to get the facts. But what, think you, was the response?

"We would if I let our competitors know what we are doing," asked a high official. "It would only help them increase their advertising effort. I would prefer to have them 'go to sleep' or just continue what they are doing."

The following facts, however, were forced out:

The company is spending more money this year than last. Its advertising is a trifle more than 10 per cent on sales than in 1920, and the total volume of sales in dollars is less—because the average sale price is $35 compared with $47 last year. But it will show a handsome increase in the number of orders. The company is getting stronger with the consumer and its dealers every month, and is increasing its advertising.

It is going ahead this year just as it did in 1907. In 1907 its competitors cut their advertising, but this concern increased its advertising. The result was that in 1908 and 1909 it showed the biggest percentage of increase over the nearest competitors than in any other year.

"We will do the same in 1921," said one executive, "and by keeping up and increasing advertising now, it insures our business for 1922 and 1923. The best business insurance for good business this year and next and the years to come is 'keep your advertising going and do not neglect the consumer.'"

* * *

Are you going to sleep or are you determined to exercise at least as much sense as a hungry donkey?

SHORT COVERING CAUSED THE ADVANCE

Baldwin a Leader in the Rise; Rails Retain Gains; Oils Reactionary

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

Gains were the rule on the New York Stock Exchange at noon, but the price level was below the highest for the morning. Forenoon advances ranged from fractions to three points, while losses were fractional in most cases. Baldwin attracted the most attention. In some quarters it is believed that the short interest is largest in this stock than in any other steel industrial. There was not much although trading stock in the second hour.

Oils were inclined to be reactionary but rails retained gains well. Among the strongest were Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, New York Central, New Haven, Reading, Chesapeake and Ohio, Western and Pacific and New York, Ontario and Western. American Petroleum advanced two points but lost this and more than one heside. Studebaker fluctuated between more than a point to a point and a half. Baldwin was up 1¼, but lost most of its advance. Trading was of fair volume, morning transactions amounting to about 250,000 shares. Call loans renewed at 5 per cent, but foreign exchange rates ruled a little higher.

HIGHER AT START.

Prices were higher at the start and, although there were pauses in the ascent, the list worked upward during the first hour. Mexican Petroleum and Baldwin led in activity, but trading in general was of good volume. Two thousand shares of Baldwin were sold at the opening from 85½ to 86¼. U. S. Steel held a fractional gain during the first hour and stood in a class with up, reflecting encouraging reports as to increasing operations in this industry. Point or more gains were shown by representative oils, motors, rails and tobaccos. American Sugar was weak, but there was not much business in sugars. U. S. Food Products sold at a record low, reviving rumors of passing of the largest first hour advance was three points by Delaware, Lackawanna & Western.

BALDWIN THE FEATURE.

Baldwin was the outstanding feature of trading, and one press dispatch says the rush to buy was such a "scramble" that it took one minutes to get quotations. The record of its opening prices. Short covering was making it accountable for gains in the morning. The embargo on the discount rate from 6¼ to 6 per cent. by the New York Federal Reserve Bank was according to forecast, but, although expected, it had sentimental effect. The Bank of England's discount rate remained unchanged at 6½ per cent.

The extension of the Anglo-French ll indicated by the borrowing demand for stocks. At the close of the exchange on Saturday Mexican Petroleum, which commanded 2 per cent. and then loaned flat. American Sugar also loaned flat and Tobacco Products 2 per cent. The general rates were 5 per cent. for industrials and 5 per cent. for railroads. Members of the New York Stock Exchange have been relieved of the waiting requirements of making daily reports on the amount of money they borrow on time and call.

FEAR BATTLES WITH HOBOES IN WEST

Railroad Men Anxious Over Influx of Idle Hordes, Says Spillane

By RICHARD SPILLANE.

On the Road, Sept. 22.—There may be clashes, serious clashes, later on between the authorities and the hobo bands drifting about the country between the Missouri and the Pag West. Although only fragmentary stories have been printed about the situation, railroad men and municipal and State officials confess it is portentous.

Tramps used to travel in small groups. Now they move in bands of scores or hundreds. There have been battles between the hoboes and railroad crews and police forces, with some killed and many injured. There seems to have come an understanding between the railroad people and the hoboes that differs from the ride in empty cars without interference, but they must avoid passenger trains.

The shutdown of coal in the mining districts, lumber camps, the ending of the harvesting season has added to the ordinary flow of the army of the idle over the Western lands. So long as the weather is right months hoboes have no serious troubles, but with the coming of cold weather they will be made desperate.

In the cities between the Missouri and the Pacific there appears to be a determined effort to get rid of the hoboes out. Newcomers, with no visible means of support, are ordered to get out of town and then it is seen that they obey promptly. It is done quietly, so quietly, but so thoroughly that there is no superficial evidence of the number of nomads in the West.

The Railroad men say they never saw so many hoboes in the West and so many who proclaim I. W. W. aims. They are coming in tramps practically take charge of freight trains for a few miles.

So long as the hoboes content themselves with stree transportation the railroad will be content, but they have no doubt that sooner or later there will be serious trouble.

Some of the estimates of the number of drifters is so high as to challenge credulity, but the general run of men who should be in a position to know.

More packets are in service on the Mississippi River than for many years. High railroad rates are the explanation. The low railroad rates put the steamboats out of business when high rates are bringing them back. Some day the railroads will wake up to the fact that they are robbing traffic from other channels and some of it may be brought back by a reduction in rates is long delayed.

A high off icial of one of the leading railroads of America told the writer a season of unusual and unexpected improvement in the steel business, beginning not later than December.

"Our Western roads have large steel supplies run between $25,000,000 and $35,000,000 a year," he said. We have been buying less than half that lately. Less than a million dollars will cover what we have on hand. Our stocks are nearing exhaustion of our supply. We can scrape along until March. We must place orders by December. It takes three months to get delivery. Other roads I know are in our position. Some may be worse off, some better.

"The reason the railroads have been able to scrape along so far without replenishing stocks or rather buying more material, is that much stuff ordered in the period of high prices was delayed in delivery. Some of it could not be behind in filling orders that we did not get deliveries until the bottom had passed and prices started up.

"I look for a sharp revival in the steel industry. In fact in every line furnishing supplies to railroads. Watch the stock market quotations on the big steel companies. They will begin to advance as orders begin to come in."

WALL ST. GOSSIP

By MONITOR.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Puzzling irregularity with instances of partial weakness, gave the market an unsettled appearance yesterday which was not offset by the few examples of isolated strength. As a matter of fact, the market was showing a sharp downward tendency until the close when the announcement of the regular Northern Pacific dividend stimulated scattered buying, which resulted in a feverish rally.

THE most discouraging exhibit of the day was the break in Mexican Petroleum, which extended over 5½ points at the extremity of the decline, in spite of the fact that the issue sold ex-dividend three points. The close was unsettled at a net loss of 3½ points. Baldwin, Royal Dutch and Famous Players were under pressure. The shipping shares were steady to firm and quite a sharp upturn took place in American International. Among the specialities Asia Rubber was active and strong on reports of buying of the account of one of the prominent figures in the motor world.

STEEL stocks were only moderately affected by the unfavorable reports in the industry in the weekly review of the Iron Age.

THERE are few days when the news tickers do not print some item of a new kind owned or leased by the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Company. Such a report was printed this morning and a broker seeing it merely commented, "Well, well, well."

CHARLES STEELE, member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Company and Thomas F. Ryan are passengers on the Olympic which arrived here yesterday. Mr. Steele said that both Great Britain and France are making favorable progress and are particularly desirous of paying their indebtedness to the United States. Mr. Ryan said that progress was being made in these countries based principally on the adoption of sound financial policies. A long time may elapse before a return to anything like normal conditions. These are vital points are fairly typical of the conflicting views by bankers and business men who have travelled abroad to obtain first hand information.

THE artificial position of certain stocks was clearly indicated when International Paper broke two points between sales on an offering of 1100 shares. There was no news to account for the selling but the price believed that a pool which has been supporting the stock recently was seeking to dispose of some of its holdings.

HORACE WILKINSON, chairman of the Board of the Crucible Steel Company said that the company received orders during August 26 per cent in excess of those in July, which was the lowest this year. He said that a corresponding increase over this month had been maintained and expressed the opinion that the rest of the year would see more activity in the steel business.

REPORTS are current from time to time as to the plan for reorganizing the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad. No official statement has been issued and from a high source it is learned that the reorganization plan contemplates an assessment of $25 per share on the common stock and $50 per share on the preferred, either 1 per cent. and adjustment bonds. Less than a million dollars will cover what we have on hand. Our stocks are nearing exhaustion of our supply. We can scrape along until March. We must place orders by December. It takes three months to get delivery. Other roads I know are in our position. Some may be worse off, some better.

MONEY EASY IN AGRICULTURAL DISTRICTS

Reports Show Farmers Have Enough and Are Willing to Spend It

By C. B. EVANS.

Chicago, Sept. 22.—The Lizzie has not run a mile with all the money of the farmers; indeed, she is demonstrating that in the long run she can improve his financial status. In contrast with the lugubrious accounts of agricultural conditions between the Alleghenies and the Rockies, one is getting fresh advices of a highly encouraging character.

Among cattle-ranging such reports is the Western manager of a highly important house handling the textile trade, who has just visited all important points in that territory and who has information from others making similar discoveries.

ARE WILLING TO SPEND.

The ultimate purport of these advices is that the farmers have money and are willing to spend it. The actual facts are materially better than they appeared in the forecast made last Spring.

The retailers recently found themselves pretty generally out of stock and jobbers perceived the situation and the producers of both cotton and woolen fabrics began booking. The advanced prices for cotton fabrics gave buyers a little chill at first, but they have come gradually over it and now the mills in some instances are thirty to forty days behind in their deliveries in spite of working over hours in the shipping rooms.

COTTON FABRICS WITHHELD.

The more expert cotton fabrics are withheld from the market in the expectation of still higher figures. Yet it is believed by the trade in general has resigned itself to the certainty of much smaller profits than have been the rule in recent years, that is profits far below those of the boom times of the war.

Scarcity taking the place of superabundance accounts for the present demand for goods.

At least in cotton and woolen fabrics the country is no longer overstocked with goods. In figuring on prices some of the best authorities are FEARS FOR 1922 CROP.

P. S. Goodman, the crop statistician having a considerable quantity of data regarding the cotton crop does not express himself yet in definite figures as to this year's yield but he does not look for a crop like that of last year and the carryover certainly would not. Under "normal" and ordinary conditions, but Mr. Goodman fears trouble on a large scale for the crop of 1922.

That past has been gaining ground and prosperity in the cities are seen as far North as the northern boundary of North Carolina and elsewhere, the chief exception being the failure in the crop of next year, the effect on many interests will be serious.

ENCOURAGES WOOLENS.

Of course the best of us have to depend on the crop expert and entomologist and at such a long range an opinion must be subject to qualifications later on, but he suggests that the position and prospects of cotton may have an important bearing on the wool market. Indeed that anybody starting now in the business of making thin fabrics of of cotton would stand a pretty good chance of success. One might be glad in a way for wool is a long suffering commodity. In respect it may grade the southern specialty has outstripped it in market values.

The Lizzie has a strong farmer that has pulled cotton goods out of the hole they were in not many months ago and wool, hopeless as it has appeared for three years past, may follow.

WHENCE THE BUYING ABILITY.

In view of the condition in the farm country as portrayed earlier in the week the question arises as to the source how that part of the world suddenly finds itself rich enough to buy the things that people like

CORPORATIONS TO PAY OVER 16 MILLION TAXES

State Starts Collection of Huge Excise Levy From Big Financial Groups

The balance will be collected from corporations to which franchises have been granted by the State. Telephone and telegraph companies will pay $1,012,810.15; railroads, $233,-$91.90, and so on down the line of public utility corporations until the aqueduct companies are reached. They will pay the State $26.24.

NEWS AND HAPPENINGS IN THE WORLD OF MOTION PICTURES

By FRIEDA DAVIS.

SHAKESPEARE queried, or had one of his characters query for him, "What's in a name?" And the movie producers yell with one accord, "Everything!"

It is a fact that a title can make or mar a picture—that is, unless the star or producer isn't one who can swell the box-office receipts regardless of what he calls his film. Particularly does this apply to comedies.

The subject was suggested by announcements I received that Bert Lytell would be seen next in "The Right That Failed"; and Harold Lloyd in "Now or Never" on his next comedy, "The Sailor-Made Man." Christie Comedies scored a distinct hit with "The Reckless Sex," while Lee Moran anticipates heavy returns on the showing of his zone starring project, "Robinson's Trousseau."

All this shows that not only does an unusual name score but that take-offs on plays are "what the public wants." John Emerson left Annie Laurie when this they decided to title their story, "Wife Insurance." Other than burlesque titles, however, have value in the eyes of the theatre owners. For example, Griffith's idea for his last film, "Dream Street," was excellent. Not that it mattered, a Griffith picture by any name whatever would be a success.

On the other hand the producers are apt to carry this theory too far. When a well-known novel and play, say, "Peter Ibbetson," is transformed for the screen the original title and the one that has already won it many thousands of friends is discarded for something "very snappy." "Ibbetson," as we all know, was first retitled "The Love Dream," and is at the Lasky studio now ready to face its public as "Forever."

FANNIE WARD DECIDES

THE hordes of Fannie Ward fans, who have asked repeatedly the whereabouts and future plans of their favorite, are in for a big disappointment. Miss Ward has deserted the United States for good.

Word comes from London that Miss Ward has given orders to have all her treasures in this country sold. That breaks her last tie with her old home. She has left Paris, where she has been living for some years, and is installed in her London house. Her daughter and her husband, Jack Dean, are with her.

MARION DAVIES STARTS WORK.

WORD comes from the West coast, where Marion Davies has been spending her vacation, that she has started work under the tutelage of Robert Vignola on her next Cosmopolitan feature, "Enchantment."

A strong cast has been chosen as support for the star. Among them will be June Elvidge, Forrest Stanley, Truly Charlock, Thomas Jefferson, Hal Cooley, Antrim Short and Lydia Yeamans Titus.

ANOTHER DECISION FOR HART.

WILLIAM S. HART is out to beat the record set by Sarah Bernhart. In other words, he is making another farewell set of pictures. Some years ago this cowboy star announced that he was leaving the screen for a quieter life. But he didn't.

Again several months ago he came to the same decision—and again he didn't. A few weeks ago he definitely foreswore films—and this time he meant it. The public knew it, too, and put up a protest. The result of their agitation is that again Hart is reconsidering. Bernhart still leads him by several decisions.

PAUL SCARDON SIGNS.

HAVING one celebrity in the family is by no means enough, according to the Scardons. Just because he happens to have married the Queen of Shebs, that is. Betty Blythe, Paul Scardon has no intention of letting the family honors rest at that.

Scardon, though not as spectacularly well-known as his wife, has, nevertheless, done some exceptionally good work in the movies. He is a director with genius of not usually grasped by his fellow-megaphone-handlers. Universal has grasped him also and will let him work directing the first Miss Du Pont starring film, "Ropes," based on the one-act play of that name by Wilbur Daniel Steele.

NORMAN TREVOR ON STAGE.

NORMAN TREVOR believes in turning his between-pictures time to good account. He is rehearsing for a stage appearance with Marie Doro in "Lilies of the Field," which is scheduled for early production in Broadway.

Trevor, whose usual appearance has opened quite a field for him on the screen, has finished work with Mabel Ballin in Hugo Ballin's special feature, "Janee Eyre," in which he is said to have done a truly remarkable piece of acting.

ALL-STAR CAST FOR FAIR.

ALL-STAR casts are announced weekly by the enterprising press agents who scout two stars and a lot of planets and see them as finishing touches. Selznick, however, has turned out a production, "A Man's Home" that can actually boast of having a cast entirely made up of present-day stars and stellarettes.

"A Man's Home" includes Grace Valentine, Kathlyn Williams, Matt Moore, Faire Binney, Harry Morey and Roland Bottomley. Every one of these players has had his or her name in electric lights. The director, too, has been starred in films, Ralph Ince.

ETHEL CLAYTON has just finished "Exit the Vamp" from Clara Beranger's original story, which she has been making under the direction of Frank Urson. She is preparing for a trip abroad as soon as she finishes "The Cradle," an adaptation of the stage play by Eugene Brieux, of which Olga Printzlau wrote the continuity.

ELLIOTT DEXTER, who is working for the Goldwyn "unit" in the all-star film, "Grand Larceny," is planning a trip abroad as soon as he is through this production.

EAST BOXFORD HOME ROBBED; BOY IS HELD

Boxford, Sept. 22.—Burglars rifled the home of Earl Davenport in East Boxford and stole all the silverware, linen and some clothing. A suspect, an eighteen-year-old youth of Peabody, has been arrested.

WASHINGTON PIE RECIPE SHOULD BE ENTERED

Collection of New England Dishes Is Aim of Boston American Contest

You may talk about your Lady Baltimore cake if you will, but it can't touch the Washington pie that mother used to make.

You make it, too, and by the same old recipe that she used in the days when you were a kiddie and hung around waiting for the first bite.

The Boston American "Best Recipe" contest wants that recipe, and there is a prize of $25 worth of groceries and goodies waiting for it—if it should prove to be the most typically Boston recipe of the week.

This paper is making up a collection of the real New England dishes and it wants that recipe. Send it to

De Valera Again Has Best of Lloyd George

His Position Is Perfect in Exchange of Diplomatic Notes

We cannot help feeling that Mr. De Valera has again overmatched Mr. Lloyd George in the exchange of diplomatic notes. His last address to the British Premier is characteristic. He says:

We have no thought at any time of asking you to accept any conditions previous to a conference. We would have thought it as unreasonable to expect you as a preliminary to recognize the Irish Republic formally or informally, as that you should expect us formally or informally to surrender our national position.

It is precisely because neither side accepts the position of the other that there is a dispute at all, and that the conference is necessary to search for and to discuss such adjustment as might compose it.

He concludes his note as follows:

We request you, therefore, to state whether your letter of September 7 is intended to be a demand for a surrender on our part or an invitation to a conference free on both sides and without prejudice, should an agreement not be reached. If the latter, we readily confirm our acceptance of the invitation.

It surely does not need any formal reasoning to show that Mr. De Valera's position is perfect. He says that the Irish representatives will accept an invitation to a conference which is free on both sides, but declines to accept an invitation to a conference which demands unconditional surrender, under which circumstances there would be no need of a conference.

It is a matter of great interest and encouragement to observe how completely those who in America were inclined to make factional opposition to Mr. De Valera have come around now to respect him.

Domination of the Seas

United States Should Not Disarm to an Extent That Would Leave Great Britain in Control

Reading the records of the debates in the British House of Commons ought to be edifying to those Americans who have been told that Great Britain would never think of waging war against the United States and that her military preparations don't contemplate the United States, and that her insistence upon dominating the seas does not take into view the United States as a possible enemy, and that for all these reasons we ought to be willing to consent to Great Britain's domination of the sea.

For example, this very week, the House of Commons had up for debate a huge appropriation for the navy and the building of four new, great battleships. All through the discussion the representative of the navy justified the building of these battleships upon the ground that the United States was building them. He even said that they were going to put sixteen-inch guns on their ships, because America was putting sixteen-inch guns on her ships. He called the attention of the House of Commons to the fact that the United States was building some new ships of a type very much superior to the ships which fought the battle of Jutland, and that the English must not permit the United States Navy to creep on them.

So clearly does the British government appreciate the fact that the friends of today are the enemies of tomorrow that her naval representative even openly discusses her ally's (Japan) naval preparation as a ground for Great Britain's increasing her naval strength. Great Britain undertakes to have a naval strength equal to that of the two largest navies in the world outside her own.

In the face of common sense and of Britain's open confession, how many people will remain insensate enough to advocate that America should disarm in such a way as to leave Great Britain mistress of the seas.

Where People's Rule Wins

Most of our people will be surprised to learn from a dispatch from Melbourne, Australia, that the Australian Government is continuing to operate with great profit five factories established during or just before the war to meet the military needs of the country. These factories include a cotton mill, a woolen mill, a leather factory, a cordite plant and a rifle plant.

Australia is the country which gave us the Australian ballot, the secret ballot which we now enjoy. Australia has a government considerably more democratic than ours. Their government does more for their people than our government does for ours. The law works more evenly in Australia. There the hand of justice lies with more equal weight upon the rich and the poor.

The government of Australia owns and operates its own railways, its telephone and telegraph companies and street railways. Australia did not dismantle her plants or sell them for nothing to private enterprise or turn back her railroads to those whose mismanagement compelled them to be taken during the war as we did. Australia is not afraid to experiment and to go forward. She is younger and smaller than we, but she has treated her soldiers splendidly compared with our treatment of our soldiers. Altogether, Australia is a fine country.

Butler and Peters Good Men

The appointment by the President of William M. Butler and Mayor Peters of Boston to represent this community at the Washington conference on unemployment are good selections on the side of the public as distinguished from the workingmen.

Six million of the people of this country are out of employment. That is a very large per cent. of those who are employed. Seven hundred thousand of our ex-soldiers are out of employment. That is nearly one-fifth of the total number.

Mr. Butler will represent the point of view of fair and intelligent business, for he is a very able man who has always exercised quietly and modestly a great deal of power in Massachusetts. In his public relations he has always followed the rule of "live and let live." He has never been ruthless.

Mayor Peters by instinct will represent the disinterested middle class. He will be fair and firm in the right as he sees it.

Now if labor is also well represented, something may come of the conference.

Better Health in England

LONDON, Sept. 22.—There is a steady improvement in the public health.

That is the general summing up of the report published of Sir George Newman, the chief medical officer of the Ministry of Health, for last year.

The birth rate jumped from 18.5 in 1919 to 25.4 in 1920; the death rate showed a steady decline at most ages and infant mortality (80 per 1,000 births) is the lowest ever recorded, though there is still much unnecessary loss of life, both of mothers and infants.

Trivial sickness becomes a serious feature in the aggregate, the expenditure on benefit for loss of time through this cause amounting to no less than 270,000 years per annum for the insured population alone.

The decline in infant mortality is held to be due to general enlightenment on the part of the mothers and the increasing popularity of welfare centres, to which 150,000 mothers take their babes regularly.

Maternal deaths, however, show an increase, and the need for more maternity homes is insisted upon.

Influenza was responsible for a considerable rise in the death rate during the first six months, and there were 890 cases of sleepy sickness during the year.

"The World Gone Mad"

By Winifred Black

Copyright, 1921, by Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.

DEAR me," said Kate. "They're having hydrophobia up North."

"And pellagra in the South," she said.

Pellagra is that awful thing that makes you go crazy, isn't it? However did it get started down South, where everybody is so quiet and good-natured and everything?"

Over went the page of the newspaper.

Another pause, while Kate read on.

"Did you ever hear anything like this!" she gasped. "Typhus is on its way from Russia."

"That's nothing," said Mary, putting in a stitch of blue next to a stitch of pink. "The girls in our neighborhood have formed a 'Never Marry Club,' and they really mean it, or think they do, and they smoke and they make cocktails—I don't know where they get the stuff, but they get it—and have little racing automobiles and tear up and down the highway till 2 o'clock in the morning and don't think a thing of it."

Two More Exhibits

"No men with them?" inquired Blanche, innocently. "No? Well, I wouldn't worry about it, then. My niece and her chums go for midnight drives with men they've barely known longer than twenty-four hours. My niece's chum met a man on the train the other day and coaxed him to stop off and pay her a visit. And when she brought him up to the house and started to introduce him she couldn't remember his name, and he acted to me as if he couldn't remember it either—or didn't want to."

Rose laughed that funny little laugh she has which sounds like water gurgling from a bottle.

"My nephew, Joe, who's been my pride and delight ever since he was born, broke his engagement with dear little Alice the other day," she ventured, "and the next thing we heard from him he was married to a girl in some chorus somewhere, and they'd gone to Africa on a honymoon."

We all sighed.

"The world's gone mad," we said, almost in a chorus.

A Missionary Grandma

"Well," said grandma, "let's not go mad with it. Did you ever see anything like that rose at the end of the piazza? How it keeps on blooming! It's fresher and more fragrant than ever. Whiff—did you get that breath? It's from the honeysuckle. And right down by the steps there's a bunch of old-fashioned phlox. Did you notice them as you came in? Pink and white—and what a perfume! Whenever I smell it, it takes me back to the time when I wore pantaiets and a little hoop-skirt. Mary, why don't you go in and persuade Hannah to let you bake some of those cookies of yours? I feel sort of faintish."

And Mary went and baked the cookies, and Kate threw down the paper and began to trim a hat for a little niece of hers who hasn't as many hats as she'd like. And Blanche drew a chair up to the porch table and began a note to a friend who is ill and could not join us in our porch party. And Rose scribbled a jolly little letter to her sister, whose boy, Joe, has run away with the undesirable. And grandma went on with her knitting and hummed a little old-fashioned tune under her breath.

And when the cookies were done we made a big pitcher of lemonade and we sat on the porch in the cool of the afternoon and laughed and talked and were sane and reasonable and happy. And do you know what, I think about grandma?

Letters to the Editor

Railroads Defended

Editor Boston American:

So much has been said about the railroad controlled by Henry Ford in effective contrast with other roads in the country, that perhaps a fact or two more in the argument would not be of detriment. Mr. Ford is undoubtedly the "wizard" he is described to be along the lines of machines and railroads, but that is not sufficient evidence that he can change the present conditions in other roads for the better. A stretch of railroad covering a few hundred miles does not carry with it the burdens of expense and responsibility which are the lot of the larger roads. Being the only man in control, Mr. Ford can gain or lose money and the world would be none the wiser.

The public is too ready to forget the strain that every railroad in the country has had to bear in the past few years, considering only its own trials in a shipment of freight or in a trip by rail. Other business has suffered and one must remember that a depression in industries reflects immediately on the business of the roads.

BUILD UP GRADUALLY

Most of us are not painstaking enough about the little things.

We fail to get the result we want because we are menially and physically too lazy to apply ourselves strictly.

On the big thing we concentrate, but only fairly well, because we have not schooled ourselves to concentrate on the little things, and so we put the hard work only on the big things and wonder what is the matter that nothing comes out as it should.

The big thing comes out right only in proportion to the carefulness of preparation in the little features which make the big thing possible.

SILENCE IS DECLARED A TANGIBLE ASSET

By Dr. Charles Fleischer

TALKING of talk, what say you about silence?

The other day the writer wrote an essay on Conversation, to the effect that most talk was not worthwhile. That immediately suggested a dissertion on Silence.

There is do doubt of it, most of us talk so much and say so little, it is a question—not disrespectfully put—whether it would not be better for us to be habitually silent.

Everybody is familiar with the German saying that speech is silver, silence is golden; speech is human, silence is divine.

The temptation is strong, and needs not be resisted, to cite Thomas Carlyle's oracular utterance on this theme: "speech is shallow as time—silence is deep as eternity."

One wonder's why we do not have more of what we so generally appreciate—in others! All you need do or say if you want silence is—nothing.

Which brings to mind a booklet, bound Royerottie, that the late Elbert Hubbard sent out from East Aurora. If memory serves, he called it "An Essay on Silence." When you looked through the booklet from cover to cover, you found only blank pages!

Expressive Silence

That might well be called an excessive silence—a silence containing the potential beauty and significance of all possible speech.

This quality resides in the potent personality of some men. There, for instance, is Herbert Hoover—essentially a man of deeds rather than of words—and whom Mayor Peters of Boston recently introduced, at a breakfast in his honor, as a man who has the support of the silent multitude of the American people.

Perhaps, duly, as some have learned from Fletcher to Betcherize their food—making a little serve much—we shall let Hoover teach us, by example, to hooverize our words—making a few do the work of many.

It may be, too, that if we habitually practice economy in speech, we shall have more to say. It would not hurt most of us to try to be "short" on words, in the hope that we may become "long" on thought.

Speaking of silent men, of the type whose banks of personality appear to be raised high, so that life shall not wastefully overflow in useless words, there looms that picturesque man of whom we shall yet hear much more than his already rich achievements have eloquently spoken.

Behold General Jan Smuts of South Africa, whose business is mankind. He is an accomplished linguist, but he can keep silent in more languages than he can speak.

He was a cabinet minister at 28, a general at 30, and has been a world figure for ten years. He almost defeated John Bull in the Boer War, but has become one of the most loyal and powerful men in the British Empire.

The creative quality of his silence interests us. He can sit for an hour during an exciting debate as expressionless as the sphinx.

Keep Picture in Mind

Keep his picture in mind, both because he is a man of such rare promise, and because his example may help to hush you into silence.

The pity of it, that one cannot say anything convincing on this subject without putting it into words!

However, if you wish seriously to school yourself into the habit of silence, you might begin by practicing self-control enough to listen while others speak. You will then learn how little value there is in most talk, and how much better it is to emulate the owl, and at least to seem wise!

By curious coincidence, at this point the writer was called to hear a goldfinch. He was perched on the topmost twig of a glistening birch in the neighboring meadow—a glorious ball of sunshine, as though he had gathered all the beauty of the midsummer day into his body and was pouring it forth in ecstatic song!

BELIEVES RUSSIAN FIRE IS OUT

By Joseph Irwin France

(Copyright, 1921, by the Baltimore Sun.)

MOSCOW.—The normal procedure for a man whose store has just burned down, I believe, is to check up as soon as possible and see what he has lost—that is, as soon as he is sure the fire is out.

I think the Russian fire is extinguished, and I think my observations in Russia have enabled me to estimate about what it cost the Russian people, in very broad terms.

Economically, the great war and the revolution together have forfeited almost every ton of export produce for a seven-year period, the bulk of modern machinery, farming and industrial, in prime condition; the gold reserve in great measure, the financial system, the goodwill of banks and industries and mercantile establishments, whose good-will ceases when they suspend business; half the live stock, much of the natural resources, such as easily available timber, which was consumed for domestic purposes; productive organization, and man power still beyond estimate. The important thing to keep in mind, however, is that a great part of this cost must be charged against the war and not against the revolution.

Politically, the cost has been one Czarist form of government. Indirectly this too may be charged against the war—or, indeed, against civilization, for the Czarist government was a surviving dodo which soon would have had to die off anyway. That its departure was such a shanty tragedy was deplorable, but not without precedent in world history.

What Are the Gains?

These are the principal losses. Now what are the gains? First, of course, is the political gain, viz., a considerable start toward a representative government. If it be for the moment controlled hand and foot by a comparatively small group, it should be remembered that for this too there is precedent. Russia is still technically at war and endangered by war. While France and England and Germany were in that state a little time ago, no one can seriously contend that the people had much to say about government. It seems to me that even in wartime America there was a rumor that the administration was accepting little advice about running the government and imprisoning a few people who offered it, or who resisted the wartime mandates.

I do not care for communism. Neither, apparently, do the Russian people, for they have abandoned it. They call it a temporary shift, but they know it is permanent.

I do not care for the soviet principle of representation, but I cannot deny that it is representative anyway. If the Russians find that it works they have every right to retain it. They cannot compel us to adopt it, however. Neither must we compel them to adopt our system of geographical representation.

Popular Will Shown

I am very strongly impressed by the certainty that this new Russian government does represent the popular will. That is why it has lasted. The plans for education, for welfare work such as the colonial scheme for electrifying all Russia, for insuring employment, for eliminating the drones, for developing industry are evidences that the benefits to the people are being sought. Often they function imperfectly. So do our American plans for universal education, for railway and highway development, for public service industries, for graduated taxation, for industrial peace. If you doubt it look around you.

I do not urge the Russian system. I do not think it would work with us. But I object vehemently to the ignorance as well as the malice back of the frivolous criticism made of it by people who neither know nor wish to know anything about it. And I am not so obstinate as to refuse to look at new ideas. If they are good ones we want them. If they are impractical this should be easily proved and no damage is done.

One Economic Gain

Economically, I should say there has been one gain so enormous as to outbalance all the awful losses of seven years. This is the settlement of the agrarian problem, which was the basis of the whole revolutionary movement in Eastern Europe. The land is no longer the possession of a handful of aristocrats, populated by a great mass of discontents. The despots are gone, and the land is owned by the people who work it, as in America and Canada and Australia, and, broadly speaking, in Western Europe. This gives confidence and contentment and industry, and these together mean a sound, energetic, enlightened farming population which will keep the nation steady.
